DINNER STORIES

Three-year-old Eddie pulled a large bunch of carnations in his grandmother's yard, though strictly forbidden to touch the flowers. A court-martial was held, with grandma as judge advocate.

A certain senator had an engagement to speak in a small southern town. The train he was traveling on was not one of the swiftest, and he lost no opportunity of keeping the conductor informed as to his opinions of that particular road.

The dapper young man lost his footing on the long and slippery hill and was tobogganing toward the bottom when he collided with a stout lady, tripped her, and proceeded on his way, with the lady seated on his back.

A small child was talking to a kitten which she held tightly in her arms. The mother, sitting near, heard the child say: "Kitty, I know all your little brothers and sisters, and I know your mamma, but I ain't never seen your papa. I s'pect he must be a commercial traveler."

Hubby had fallen down the steps and his wife was anxiously bending over him.

"Oh, Tom, did you miss a step?" she inquired with much concern. "No," he growled; "I hit 'em all."

Supreme Court Justice Tompkins of New York tells this one: "It seems there were two Irishmen, Pat and Mike. They had spent an evening together and were returning home with considerable difficulty, Mike was married and he knew that his wife would not welcome him in his condition."

"He told Pat of his worries and Pat cautioned him to be careful as he left him at the door. The next day he met Mike and asked him how he had made out with his wife the night before. 'Oh, I was very careful and quiet as I went in,' Mike replied. 'I took my shoes off down in the hall and crept up stairs in my stocking feet. Then just as I was entering the bedroom I fell over a chair. It happened that I fell so my head was close beside the bed. My wife reached out and patted my head, thinking it was the dog, and, praised be to the saints, I had sense enough to lick her hand!'"

A Californian was in a great stew over the shortage of help to harvest his crop. When a tramp stopped by the fence and asked for work, the orange grove owner looked the fellow over doubtfully and finally said: "If I were sure you are honest I'd give you a job gathering these oranges. 'Honest!' exclaimed the tramp with offended dignity. 'I was manager of a public bath for 15 years and never took a single bath.'"

It had been Johnny's good luck to become the proud possessor of a litter of kittens. Having too many, he had the idea of making some money. Thus begins our story. A ring of the doorbell and a lady of uncertain age appeared. "Do you want to buy thome toot 'tittle tittens?"

"Some what? I don't understand." "Do you want to buy thome toot 'tittle tittens?"

"Another lady appears on the scene. 'What did he say?'"

"Do you want to buy thome toot 'tittle tittens?" "I didn't understand. Will you say it again?" By this time Johnny was disgusted. "Aw, hell! Do you want to buy a dod dam tat?"

The small daughter of an actor had seen, and heard, her father rehearsing a new part, and after it was over she retired, greatly impressed, to the nursery. A little later her mother overheard her apparently rehearsing a play she was inventing as she went along. "My loved one is ill! I must go to him!"

There was a momentary pause. Then suddenly: "Blow it; he's dead!"

As the world knows, George Bernard Shaw is a staunch vegetarian, and all the many disciples of this particular dietetic cult look upon him as a shining example.

Imagine therefore, their amazement and disgust when G. B. S. said in public: "If I feel that I can enjoy a nice juicy beefsteak I have it."

One of his followers took him to task about this. "Calm yourself, my dear fellow!" drawled Shaw. "I never do feel that I can enjoy a nice juicy beefsteak."

Bits For Breakfast

Help the Slogan man—He needs your assistance to make the Floriculture edition on Thursday worthy of its setting; and that's saying a lot, for Salem and the surrounding country.

There are no speed cops left. The traffic officers have taken their places; trained men anxious to help keep the highways safe.

The flax growers must be alert, considering the pulling of the bumper crop that is coming on. It will be some job.

Looks like fair weather for fair, ahead. We may be crying for rain before we get any more of it.

Grim alfalfa is one of the greatest things that ever struck this valley. Robert Cole brought a sample of it to The Statesman office Sunday. It runs around 20 inches to two feet high, and the seed was planted on April 5.

"Think of that. Mr. Cole's place is in Mission Bottom, a mile north of the end of the pavement; nine miles north of Salem. Some of the Salem boosters, including Mr. Doerfler, induced Mr. Cole to take out eight pounds of seed on trial, and he planted a half acre with it. He expects to grow two or three crops this year. That is, he expects to have to clip it two or three times, for his chickens, sheep, cows and horses and other live stock. One of the beauties of the Grim alfalfa is that when it is once planted, and a good stand secured, it is good for all time, with the right kind of weeding, year after year, without being planted again at all. The Oregon Agricultural college is boosting Grim alfalfa, and it is being scattered all over the valley, and will help to make this section great and prosperous."
