Armenian Girls Trained In Primitive Housekeeping

ALEXANDROPOL, Russian Armenia.—An initial attempt at the scientific study of home economics is being made in the American orphanage schools here. A model village has been established, in which Arenmian girls are taught by actual practice the rudiments of household science.

The model village is no modern affair of complicated appliances and labor-saving contrivances for apartment housekeeping. It follows closely existing conditions in Armenian villages. It is the simplest kind of a practical demonstration of what can be done with more intelligent use of available materials, adoption of elementary principles of hygiene and sanitation, and the application of better means and methods of housewifery.

On a plot of two acres of land the orphanage boys have constructed six one-story buildings, using the same building materials as those of the native villages, stone, lime, sand and clay. The arrangement of rooms varies, but in each house a section of the building is walled off from the living rooms for the family cattle. Each house has a native oven built into the kitchen, and also a small vegetable garden.

The course of study includes cooking, housekeeping, weaving, gardening, and the care of household animals. The girl students shear their own sheep, wash the wool in the river, dry it in the sun, whip it with switches until it becomes fluffy, and spin it into threads on hand spindles. They dye the threads with vegetable dyes which they themselves have gathered, and finally they weave it into cloth on hand looms.

For the more proficient students there are supplementary courses in botany, soil study, cattle breeding, dairying and elementary physics and chemistry. The American responsible for the model village is Miss Pauline Jordan, a Red Cross nurse, who served in France and who has been with the Near East relief in Armenia for the past two years.

Miners Lay Crafty Plans To Circumvent Beavers

GOLDEN, B. C.—So thick and industrious have beavers become in the Winderemere valley that they are seriously interfering with mining operations, according to H. E. Perlain, of Wilmer, who is developing claims on Horse Thief Creek.

The beavers, by damming the creek, caused water to back up into the mine and it was some time before the reason was discovered. After a search the mine workers located a beaver dam and blew it up, but the mine immediately again filled with water. Another investigating party found that the destroyed dam had been reconstructed and reinforced in weak spots by the busy animals within 24 hours. Furthermore some 60 saplings, cut into usable lengths, were found ready for further work on the dam.

Officials of the British Columbia game board, in an effort to overcome the difficulty, have suggested that the flume idea, evolved by the Biological survey of the United States, be tried out on the creek. This is the cutting of a flume through the beaver dam so that the water will not rise above a certain point, on the theory that Mr. Beaver pays so much attention to his work that he never gives a glance upward. Though persistent as well as industrious, there is a limit to a beaver's patience and, finding that his dam does not succeed in holding the dam does not succeed in holding the water back, he and his crew shift to some other place and begin home-making all over again.

Three years ago the game board closed the season for trapping beaver south of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the animals have multiplied so rapidly that they are becoming a nuisance.

Temperance League Seeks Aid of England's Teachers

OXFORD Eng., June 13.—The British National Temperance League is making strenuous efforts to convert English school teachers to its aims. Recently the league entertained the delegates of the National Union of Teachers at an Oxford breakfast, given, it is worth while noting, in the hall of Christ Church, which in times past was noted as a heavy-drinking college. Many Oxford notables attended or announced their sympathy with the movement.

The vice-chancellor, whose office is somewhat equivalent to that of the American university president, pointed out that drinking has decreased enormously in the university during the past 20 years. He said that in his undergraduate days the usual entertainment was the wine party, whereas today such parties were held only on special occasions, as very few students regularly keep wine in their rooms. There was, he said, no reason for relaxing the prohibition campaign on this account. In this he was probably correct, for strict temperance has not yet in Oxford acquired the full status of a virtue. The colleges all sell beer, ale and wines to their students on long and easy credits and provide these drinks in their halls, and several operate their own breweries.

But at that there has been great improvement. A late 17th century chronicler, speaking of Balliol College which is now known as the intellectual leader of Oxford, said. "There is over against Balliol a horrid, dingy, scandalous ale-house, fit for none but draymen and tinkers. Here the Balliol men continually do lie, and by perpetual bibling add art to their natural stupidity to make themselves perfect sots."

Ireland Gives Financial Aid to Productions

DUBLIN—The Abbey theater, founded by William Butler Yeats, the poet and senator, and Lady Gregory, plays an important part in the intellectual life of Ireland. It has produced for the first time 170 plays, many of them successful, but the theater has been for the past 12 years run at a loss, and no director or shareholder has ever drawn a dividend.

To enable the institution to carry on, the finance ministry has included in the budget a grant of $4,250. In his opinion there is no agency which has done more to make the name of Ireland known abroad, and he says it would be a misfortune if the only institution in the country providing an incentive to dramatic and literary work should be closed down.

Trying to save five minutes in traffic costs that time, everyone's respect, extra gas, wear—and arrest.
