Bits For Breakfast

Reporter was mistaken—There are 13 flax pulling machines. One was brought in 1923, and 12 last year. But it would require double that number to take care of the growing flax at proper times for harvesting. There will have to be a lot of hand pulling, in an expert manner, to prevent a good deal of loss.

There are hundreds of wild canary birds making their headquarters at the Oregon penitentiary—on the east side, where the public does not see them. They frequent the yard in the inside of the wall, and they also like to hang around the flax plant, inside and outside the wall, picking up seeds that would otherwise go to waste. These diminutive birds have been coming back each year, for several years. They are called by some who have seen them "California canaries," but they are not different from the caged canaries, excepting that they have freedom—and choose to spend it in the penitentiary. It is said that in the fall of each year these birds wing their ways to South America, flying clear across the Gulf of Mexico in one night.

Those who were at the Grand opera house last night enjoyed one of the best plays extant and wonderfully well presented—but this cannot be proved by enough people to do Salem credit.

Said a man high in authority in the United States government a few days ago: "President Calles has not executed anybody, privately or publicly, except those who were caught with arms in their possession at Tabasco and other places. They were rebels. What would the United States or any other nation have done under similar circumstances? Persons who take up arms against their country must be punished. There is no talk of revolution in Mexico. The general conditions there are better than they have been for many years. The masses of the people who swept President Calles into office will get justice from him. He has told the laboring men to go slow and not to strike, because it would cause great inconvenience to every one and also would annoy him personally. That would not be good for them either, because he has a strong arm and a long reach." (There is no good reason for differences between Mexico and the United States).
