At just what stage of maturity hops are best picked has not been very clear to Oregon growers in at least some of the larger commercial yards. Some buyers have preferred the produce picked rather green, while others have insisted on thorough ripeness. This difference in demand has tended to confuse growers who depend on the general market. To help meet the situation, the Oregon Agricultural college experiment station several years ago conducted some extensive experiments to determine at what stage the hop exhibits the greatest amount of valuable constituent—soft bitter resin.

This resin gives to hops their greatest value for most uses, but does not take the place of entire market values as the aroma, carried in a very small content of volatile oil, is a factor in demand and price.

A steady increase in the amount of the soft bitter resin is shown right up to maturity. Specimens picked later than this began to show decline in bitter resin. The amount carried by the specimens used in the tests varied from 10.39 per cent in specimens picked August 11, up to 20.57 per cent in specimens picked September 19. It is thus shown that those of later and more mature pickings were nearly twice as valuable in this constituent as the early specimens. Specimens picked one week later—September 26—ran only 10 hundredths of one per cent higher—20.67. The following list shows the results of the experiment in total soft resins:

That Is Word From U. S. Crowder, Temporarily Absent, Longing to Get Back

Editor Statesman:
I have been here since the last of March, and will remain until the last of August. I am filling the pulpit as pastor of the Methodist church at this place, but I want you to know that I am keeping in close touch with Salem and the Willamette valley through the columns of The Statesman, which reaches me regularly. Although it takes it three days to reach me, I could not stay here and be satisfied without your valuable paper. Mrs. Crowder writes that the city is going ahead in fine shape. If many of the businessmen there could see other parts and other states as I have seen them for the past three months, and learn the economic condition that exist here, I feel confident they would to a larger degree, appreciate the great future of that section and the wonderful potential possibilities of Salem and the entire Willamette valley. I am looking forward with much pleasure to the time when I can return and join my family and friends in Salem, which is the garden spot of the world.
Cordially yours
U. S. CROWDER.
