July 4, 1925 WHAT EXALTS A NATION?—Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people. Proverbs 14:34.

DESTINY ON THE SIDE OF LIBERTY

One hundred and forty-nine years ago today a little group of men assembled in a frontier city on the edge of the great American wilderness and proclaimed a document that openly defied the power of the strongest military force in the then known world—

To the might of arms they opposed the power of an idea. Physically weak, they were morally strong. To European autocracy they opposed the idea of representative government, in which no hereditary distinctions should be recognized.

The total white population of the colonies represented at the Philadelphia conference was not more than three times that of the state of Oregon at the present time—

And they had no army and no navy. Their only foreign commerce was with British colonies and carried in British ships.

As one reads the records of those stirring, glorious days at the present time one wonders how they had the courage to do it. For the moment Great Britain was enjoying an interim of peace. She was in position to send fleets and armies of trained troops to the colonies to suppress any attempted rebellion. And the penalty of the instigators of revolt in those days was death—

Yet the moral courage that the sense of justice gives proved stronger than physical weakness. The colonists fought and the wilderness fought with them. New York and Philadelphia fell, the Continental army was reduced to a skeleton, but the spirit of liberty as expressed in representative government continued to live. They held on when all but hope was dead. So often did they perform the seemingly impossible that Frederick of Prussia and Louis of France realized that they could strike England a real blow through lending military and financial support to the revolting colonies—

So destiny fought on the side of liberty and justice. The cause of the colonies won support even in the autocratic British Parliament. Liberty and the wilderness proved more powerful than British arms. Then came the glorious day when England signed the treaty that established before the world the independence of the American colonies.

The Constitution had not been written: The thirteen colonies were officially known as the Confederation. The United States was yet to be born. But the first step in the great march of progress in representative government in America had been taken.

No other people has made such progress since that epochal day in 1776, when the representatives of the colonies risked their fortunes and their lives in the cause of liberty and justice against autocracy and tyranny. It was the most glorious venture that modern history records.

As we face the world on the anniversary of that day we can well ask ourselves if we possess the sterling qualities of that rugged ancestry. So long as they were morally right they feared not powerful wrong. They did not know how their struggle would end; but they preferred to lose all in the cause of liberty rather than to continue to live as vassals of a foreign power.

There are decisions to take in the reconstruction of the world since the last war that are as important as the one made on that July the Fourth in Philadelphia. There are tyrannies as hateful to justice and morals as that of the former Old World autocracies.

The United States is now rich and powerful. It has no occasion to fear any foe armed with the weapons of war. But the field of conflict has been shifted from the physical to the moral and intellectual plane. Communism and anarchy are as hateful to the spirit of free representative government as absolute monarchy.

The coming race of men and women in America has a right to a heritage both intellectually intelligent and morally upright—

And we have larger possibilities as a nation than in the days when our republic was young and isolated—

For our nation has come to the place of highest leadership among the nations of the world. We as a people are keepers of the world's peace, and we are trustees of the world's progress—

And we are not living up to our responsibilities as a people if we are derelict in our duties as such keepers and trustees, for the weal or the woe of the very fabric of civilization.

EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY

"There has been much talk about farm surpluses. These have been growing smaller with great rapidity, and the time when deficits will be the rule rather than surpluses is closer perhaps than many of you think," said Edward C. Johnson, dean of agriculture, in a radio talk on the agricultural profession given recently over radio at the state college of Washington.

"When these come, the farmer will be in a strategic position. Training for scientific farming, therefore, and for agricultural business of various kinds, will make it possible for our young men to realize the many opportunities that are bound to come in the agricultural field."

"It is well known that about one-third of the people of the country live on the farm. On the other hand, less than 7 per cent of all the male students enrolled in the colleges of the country are securing an agricultural education. In other words there are less than 7 per cent of our students preparing themselves for an occupation in which about 30 per cent of the people are engaged. That looks as though there would be opportunity for everyone of the hight character who is now equipping himself for work in the agricultural field."

These observations are well worth careful consideration. At the present time when there is much of discouragement heralded abroad concerning farming, is the very time to "take stock" for the future.

Wise is the person usually who, when there is depression due to low prices or otherwise, prepares for the rising tide of prosperity. Many a man stimulated by high prices of livestock or merchandise re-stocks to his limit just in time to get caught by the receding tide—and many failures is the result of this kind of judgment. The time to buy the farm is usually when the price of acreage is low. The chances then are on the side of a rise in prices of both land and crops.

Agriculture is the basic industry of the country and will always hold this rank. The former drudgery of the farm is giving way every year to mechanical devices and centralization in marketing products. The isolation which was for many years one of the chief barriers against farm life is being overcome by the telephone, free rural delivery, automobile, the radio and community center activities.

In dignity, independence and in service to the whole world no other industry equals agriculture. It offers to the young man who will train himself for one or more distinctive branches of it, splendid opportunities for distinguished success.

BARGAIN DAY

Salem's eighth annual Bargain Day is now a matter of history. Merchants report it a huge success—that more people thronged the stores and made purchases than during any other annual bargain day. "Biggest Ever," "Good from start to finish," "better than last year" are some of the expressions heard from the merchants when the day's sales were over.

And the results of this event calls attention to trade conditions in and around Salem. Many persons within the city look forward no doubt to this day as the time for replenishing the household with necessities for both the present and the future at a saving over the regular prices. People in the rural districts center trade on this day for the same reasons. But if greater interest to Salem is the opportunity for cooperation and stimulation of trade in an area comprising seventy thousand people and itself the center. The response of these patrons at the local mercantile institutions Thursday should be capitalized by the merchants in continuing attractive goods, prices and service which will retain and even increase business.

The visitors stimulated by special attention in matters of quality merchandise at special prices, and of courteous, prompt service will herald their good will and practice loyalty to the home city.
