WHAT IS EATING THIS MAN CHAPMAN ANY WAY?

HE IS TELLING A LOT OF THINGS ALREADY KNOWN

Pretending to Warn the Farmers Against Planting Flax Unless It Is Sold

(Under the heading, "Flax, Flax, Flax," C. C. Chapman's Oregon Voter of yesterday's date has an article pretending to warn our farmers against planting flax unless they have it sold, or have facilities for scutching and retting it. The farmers all know this. They are going to plant no flax unless they have it contracted, or know, or think they know how it is to be threshed, retted and scutched. This is so academic and trite and commonplace that one wonders what is eating this man Chapman. Is he trying to discredit the industry? If so, for what purpose, or in whose interest? There is nothing the matter with his article, excepting that farmers do not read his paper, and that every farmer who has sense enough to come in out of the rain knows as much about what he is pretending to tell him as Chapman does; or more. Following is the article:)

"The furore of flax in the Willamette valley is remarkable. Valley newspapers are full of it, that is, news about it. Crop estimates, experiences with acre experimental plots, flax pulling plans, market conditions and prices, contracts made to buy and sell fibre. Salem flax mill financing progress,—news about these phases of the booming industry appears in constantly increasing quantity.

"There is no mistaking the interest in flax. Farmers are looking forward to it as a new and profitable crop. Some cities are counting upon it as a means of industrial growth. The Oregon Agricultural college is wisely making tests of growing conditions in various communities before hazarding the guess that the fibre crop is suited to local conditions.

"Some of the newspapers are running what has every appearance of being flax propaganda. There are interviews on the merits of flax pulling machines given by agents for such machinery. All that is legitimate, but it only goes to prove that a flax furore is on in full swing. The danger that lies in such a situation is over-production. Mill owners and promoters will probably not agree that such a danger is possible. The profit from flax fibre and by-product from its preparation and manufacture seem certain. But so have the profits from other agricultural products that have gripped the imagination of the Willamette Valley in years past, only to dwindle when production overran utilization.

"One thing has been noticeably absent in the flax publicity that has flooded the valley during the past three months. There has been little or no mention of definite, well-financed plans for the numerous retting and scutching plants that are absolutely necessary at many points in the valley before the growth of flax will be assuredly profitable. These plants, which require capital in the case of scutching machinery and keen analysis of chemical and other technical factors in the case of retting operations, are as necessary as are hop driers to hops and prune driers to prunes. And they will have to be almost as numerous. The state penitentiary cannot be easily expanded. Farmers cannot easily supply the capital, and they are most certainly dependent upon expert assistance in their retting operations.

"The recently financed Salem flax mill, it is said, will take care of these preliminary steps in manufacture by assisting in the establishment of scutching mills and furnishing the experts in the retting process. That is encouraging. Someone must do it. For it cannot be successfully contradicted that these two processes are just as important in the establishment of a successful linen manufacturing industry as the weaving looms themselves.

"Unless the retting and scutching end of the flax furore is well taken care of, particularly the retting, which can make or spoil flax fibre, farmers should take care lest the tonnage they produce clogs the facilities available, thus permitting the fine acreage profits to vanish in thin air. For it should be remembered that Belgium, France and Russia have been retting flax straw for generations. Skill in those countries is hereditary, and, incidentally, the result of tedious and painstaking labor. How many farmers in Oregon know anything about the intricacies of flax retting? They should see to it that someone is at hand who knows, not guesses, the process, before they turn the best part of their land to a new product."

The Willamette valley is the center of all farm crops in Oregon and Salem is the heart of the valley. Come to Salem to live, and bring all your friends.
