AT A GARDEN WEDDING AT the country home of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Marcus, south of town, their oldest daughter, Miss Mabel Marcus, became the bride of Mr. Earl R. Cooley of McArthur, California. The ceremony was performed at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, July 8, with the Rev. Monroe G. Everett of Corvallis officiating. The single ring service was used.

A garden setting of unusual effectiveness was arranged with the altar improvised under the arch of a cherry tree. A floral bell of Shasta daisies was suspended from the cherry bough, while baskets of the daisies were used in a graduated row on either side with banks of huckleberry foliage and ivy completing the garden bower.

Immediately preceding the ceremony, Miss Josephine Bross, accompanied by Miss Frances Hodge at the piano, sang in a beautiful manner "At Dawning," followed with a second vocal solo, "Until." Miss Frances Hodge played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

The bride, lovely in white crepe-back satin, with crystal beading, approached the altar on the arm of her father who gave his daughter in marriage. A full-length wedding veil of filmy tulle secured with medallions of heirloom pearls, which have been in the family for many years, adorned the wedding gown. The bride's bouquet was a shower of Ophelia roses and white sweet peas. Her only attendant was her younger sister, Miss Helen Marcus, as maid-of-honor, who was attractive in rose-pink voile over rose-pink satin. She carried a shower bouquet of deep pink sweet peas with satin streamers in the same shade. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Monroe Cooley, as best man.

An interesting interlude in the ceremony came with the singing of "The Prayer Perfect," by Miss Josephine Bross, who stood unseen within the house.

A reception followed the congratulations, with a profusion of flowers used in the rooms, the pink and white tones predominating. The fire-place was banked with mountain greenery while a crystal basket of pink and white carnations was used on the mantel, and other baskets of white perennial peas, huckers, and sweet peas variously about the rooms. Mrs. J. W. Harrison, Mrs. L. M. Purvine, and Miss Mary Gilbert assisted. Miss Dorothy Moore, in a frock of pink, presented each guest with a favor of bride's cake from a tulle-tied basket.

A reception table of unusual beauty was arranged in the dining room. A cut-glass bowl of deep pink gladioli, guarded with four exquisitely tall candles in crystal holders, centered the table. During the first hour, Mrs. W. H. Steustoff and Mrs. John Watt of Portland presided at the urns. At the second hour their places were taken by Mrs. W. W. Moore and Mrs. D. A. Hodge. A group of charming young girls, Miss Jean McClew, and Miss Anne McClew of Eugene, Miss Lucille Moore, and Miss Marjorie Marcus, assisted in the serving. A host of wedding presents in cut-glass, silver, and linen were on display across one side of the long living room.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cooley are popular graduates of the Oregon Agricultural college. Mr. Cooley from the department of agriculture in 1922 and Mrs. Cooley from the vocational education group in 1925. Mrs. Cooley is a member not only of the Sigma Kappa sorority but also of the Delta Psi Kappa honorary physical education fraternity. Prominent in musical circles, she was a member of the Madrigal club while in college. As an undergraduate, Mrs. Cooley was also a member of the campus YWCA board. Mr. Cooley is a member of the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity of which he was manager and one of the founders. Since his graduation in agriculture he has been a member of the faculty at the McArthur Union high school, where he has also acted as athletic coach. For a number of years he has been one of the leaders in the development of boys' and girls' club work. The parents of Mr. Cooley, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Cooley of Jefferson, owing to a business trip to Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Canada which will necessitate their absence until the middle of August, were unable to be present for the ceremony.

After a wedding trip to points north, Mr. and Mrs. Cooley will return to Salem the latter part of the month, after which they will go to McArthur, California, to make their home. The bride's going-away costume was an ensemble of beige bengaline, with blouse of green novelty silk, worn with hat and accessories to harmonize.

Invitations were issued only to relatives and the closest friends.

YMCA CAMP PROSPECTS ARE GOOD THIS YEAR

QUOTA FOR NESKOWIN OUT-ING IS NOW COMPLETE

Special Instructors to Have Charge of Boys at Coast Beginning July 23

Prospects for the YMCA boys' camp, to be held July 23, are better this year than ever before. Much of the promised success of this year's camp is due to the reputation gained through former camps. The Salem quota is over-sold now and new ones coming in can only be taken as an occasional one of those already signed up drops out.

The camp will be held near Neskowin, which means plenty of fishing for all who enjoy that sport. It is to be on the William Walton beach, one of the most beautiful sand beaches in Oregon.

Besides the regular schedule, a course of practical work will be carried on. Among the special instructors will be J. Cronemiller, deputy state forester, who will conduct a special class in forestry. He will give practical talks on trees and plant life. C. Bacham will have charge of the botany and fauna life classes, and Chief Bent will give studies in Indian folk lore and life. Life saving and swimming tests will be in charge of Loyal Warner, Red Cross examiner. Bible study will be in charge of Ben Kimber.

"Bob" Boardman will have charge of the first aid and sex hygiene instruction.

Regular hikes and nature study trips will be on the daily schedule. The supervision is of the best and parents can be assured that strict supervision will be maintained from the first hour of the morning to the last hour at night.

Ole Olson Cray, the famous camp chef, will have charge of the kitchen. He is famous for his camp menus and is remembered with true regard by all last year's campers.

Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Davis are on a vacation to Newport.

CHAPTER 54

Why Madge Was Able to Distract Leila's Thoughts From Her Own Problem

I had spent a tense quarter of an hour in the effort to convince Leila Durkee that her husband did not care for Bess Dean, except as she would admire any pretty and witty girl. But at her direct appeal to me to convince her of Alfred's truth, I flinched for a conscience-stricken second, although I was able to keep Leila in ignorance of my feeling.

For I was far from sure just how strong was Alfred's admiration of Bess Dean's undeniably good looks, keen mentality and fascinating little ways. While I had been annoyed at Dicky's attentions to the girl in the hectic days which I remembered only too clearly, yet I had known my Peter Pan far too well to be jealous of him where Bess Dean was concerned. But while I was reasonably sure that Leila had as little to fear as I, yet I could not rid myself of a lingering little doubt concerning Alfred's real feelings.

But I schooled my face and voice so that no hint of my doubt should escape me, and answered Leila with a convincing air of sincerity.

Madge Salves Her Conscience.

"If all you need to make you the happiest woman alive is my assurance that you have no real cause to hate Bess Dean, you'd better get out your banners to celebrate," I said. "Now, let me bathe your face and put on your shoes. You don't want to let Alfred know that you have been crying."

I purposely made my voice brusque to conceal my own emotion at the sight of the joyous relief which had flooded her face at my assurance. She was so eminently child-like in her unquestioning belief of all I had told her, that I chilled with the fear of having lulled her into false security.

But I salved my conscience with the reflection that almost any deceit was justifiable in her condition of mind and body, and steeled my will to the resolve that I would make my assurance of Alfred's essential fidelity come true if I had to half-kill him in the process.

She smiled up at me joyously, and made a pathetic attempt to arrange her hair.

"No, indeed, he mustn't see that I have been crying," she assented. "I suppose I ought to tell him—"

She broke off after a shy glance at me, with the color flooding her face and neck.

"Poor, Poor Mother!"

"Don't tell him anything just now," I advised, lacing her shoes. "I'll tell you why when I've played lady's maid for a few minutes."

That her curiosity would be aroused by my words, I knew, for I had uttered them with that purpose, and I noted with satisfaction that while I bathed her face and rearranged her hair, she appeared to be debating something with herself. At least I had succeeded in diverting her attention, I said to myself with a humorous remembrance of hearing the expression used by a psychologist lecturing on children's management. And when she was restored to her usual dainty appearance, she finished my analogy by saying naively:

"Now, will you tell me why?"

"Because Alfred will be so sorrowful tonight that he won't be able to think of anything else save his mother. And you must be brave and help him."

I put my arm around her as I spoke and felt my heart constrict with pity as her slight figure trembled and shrank closer to me.

"Oh, Madge! What is it?"

In the fewest words I could muster, I told her of her mother-in-law's mysterious ailment which she had kept from the knowledge of her son and daughter-in-law for fear of worrying them, of her visit with me to Dr. Foxham, of his verdict that an operation would probably be necessary, and of the fact that Alfred was even now closeted with his mother, after I had told him at her request of her plight.

"Oh, poor, poor Mother!" Leila wailed when I had finished. "And we never dreamed—the brave, unselfish darling! And poor Alfred! What a selfish girl I've been—thinking only of my own troubles! Don't you think I might go to them now, so they will know how much I want to help them?"

Bisley Marksman Not So Sure of Targets in Water

DUBLIN.—A Bisley marksman may be good at shooting at targets, but pretty poor when it comes to shooting seals. The minister for fisheries disclosed in the Dail, when dealing with complaints of the destruction of fish by seals, that the ministry had engaged a Bisley marksman to shoot seals and kept him at work

London to Build Fine Docks to Attract Ships

LONDON.—London is planning to make the landing of travelers at Tributary docks so easy and pleasant that liners will bring their passengers here instead of going to Liverpool, Plymouth or Southampton.

At an expenditure estimated at $20,000,000 huge new docks will be built and the latest devices for the rapid embarkation of passengers and baggage will be installed. London can be reached in 40 minutes from Tilbury, as against much longer train trips from other ports. The work is to start at once.
