

Packard Driven From Los Angeles to New York

Lieutenant Leigh Wade, pilot of the airplane Boston, on the U. S. army's around-the-world flight, seated at the wheel of his Packard eight car in which he drove from Los Angeles to New York over a route 3600 miles long without once stopping the car. Standing beside the car is Linton Wells, newspaper man who was his companion on the trip. Wells is the man who stowed away in Wade's plane at Calcutta, India and rode 3,000 miles. The non-stop cross country run was made under the auspices of the American Automobile Association. The average speed for the entire trip was scheduled at 24.5 miles an hour as one of the most important features of the drive was the plan for an unwavering observance of the law over the full distance. The slow speed made the test of both the motor car and the highway system even more difficult.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

Auguste Bruggeman, professor at the Institut d'Urbanisme de l'Université de Paris, is quoted as saying that "the present vital problem of traffic in every modern town is largely the result of an inadequate or insufficient street plan. The methodical research made by city planners of traffic experts to improve the actual conditions of street circulation, as well as the various temporary remedies for congestion, show that no definite solution is to be found in police regulation, which only gives an apparent relief, in spite of the favorable results obtained from their application."

What Professor Bruggeman points out is the experience of every community large enough to have a real traffic problem. Police control of traffic is only part of the solution.

Those who planned our cities years ago knew nothing about motor cars. If they had been gifted with vision our cities would look much different today.

The problem of city builders is to anticipate the traffic problems of ten, twenty and thirty years from now. Our traffic problems become more serious as the number of motor cars increase, as the number of tall buildings increase, and as our cities grow.

The wise city is the city which plans its future. That city will begin now to anticipate its problems.

MANZANITA

Hikers over the week-end to Arch cape from Manzanita report that the survey of the road around Neahkahnie mountain, the prospective Roosevelt highway, has advanced to a short distance beyond Short Sand Beach. One wonders if when the construction work on the road is started the fabled treasure of Neahkahnie mountain may not be unearthed. There must be one if one is to judge by the diligence of the efforts which various persons have put forth in digging for it. One man Pat Smith, apparently has faith in the existence of the treasure for he has come every summer for twenty years to try his luck, so far with no results. But he has the space narrowed down to an acre by his calculations so perhaps he may find it eventually.

Mrs. Herbert S. McCutchan, with her father Col. S. W. Blasdel, and Miss Muriel McCutchan, of Portland have the Ernst Rosen cottage for two weeks.

Mrs. L. E. Cornell and her niece Virginia Hale of Portland are domiciled in the Cederson cottage for several days. Mrs. Hale and Mr. L. E. Cornell were visitors over the week-end.
