CHAPTER NO. F 80 THE STRANGE SOUNDS BOTH KATHERINE AND MADGE HEARD

At Katherine's demand and clutch of my arm, my eyes folowed hers to the copse of evergreens surrounding the house across the road from the farm. "See what?" I queried a bit studidly.

"Then you didn't." she answered in a disappointed tone. "I was so hoping you had. For it you had I'd have known I wasn't imagining things." "If you'll just tell me what you thought you saw," I suggested, "That might be a good idea," she assented with a smile. "I was sure I saw a man bent almost double. dodging through those evergreens. Didn't you see

I grinned appreciatively and we walked toward the ramshackle fence which enclosed the farmyard. Before we reached it, a huge dog sprang from the bushes and savagely barking, ran toward us. I forced myself to stand still and face the beast, strengthened by Mrs. Ticer's assurance that the animal would not come out of the

He fully justified Mrs. Ticer's prediction, and for fully two minutes we stood ridiculously on one side of the fence, while the dog barked and growled at us from the other. Then a frightened-looking woman with bare feet thrust into a pair of men's shoes and a scanty dress fluttering in the wind, came running down to the fence, scolding the dog as she came.

THE GOOD EXAMPLE An old tombstone bears the simple inscription: "He set a good example for others." A perfect tribute, it seems to me. .... Example is more forcible than

In the main, example works either by restraining a man or by encouraging him. It has the former effect when it determines him to leave undone what he wanted to do.

Or he may see that another man, who has not retrained, has incurred evil consequences from doing it. The example which encourages a man works in a two-fold manner. It either induces him to do what he would be glad to do undone, if he were not afraid the omission might in some way endanger him, or injure him in others' opinion; or else it encourages him to do what he is frained from doing from fear of danger or shame. Finally, example may bring a man to do what he would have otherwise never thought of doing.
