(The following is from the Portland Oregonian of Sunday morning last.)
SALEM, Or., Aug. 1.—(Special)—The Oregon state penitentiary, with 24 machines in operation and a crew of 50 convicts at work, now has the largest and best equipped flax scutching mill in the world. Oregon's nearest competitor in the flax industry is in Ireland, where there is a mill with 23 machines. As an inducement for good work and attention to business, the state pays the convicts employed in the flax plant 50 cents a day. Similar compensation is provided for convicts engaged in other departments of the flax industry, including work of stacking the raw material, operating the retting tanks and taking care of the flax in the drying fields. The drying process follows retting of the flax and requires a period of approximately ten days.

(The Portland office of the Botsford-Constantine company, general advertising agents, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland, in answer to a request of the Oregon editor, sends the following:
National advertising is doing much to bring the state of Oregon and its resources, advantage and opportunities before the people of the United States.
The result of this will be a steady growth in population, new capital brought into the state, new and enlarged industries, a bigger and better Oregon.
While often the results of advertising are so intangible that it is difficult to accurately say that a thing has been accomplished through advertising which would not otherwise have been done, Oregon and Salem can look upon a large percentage of tourist travel through the state as the result of advertising.
Pacific coast states, Oregon included, have spent large sums of money exploiting the coast as an ideal vacation land. The railroads of the United States have also added their large resources to these campaigns. But they have gone a step farther. They have pointed out that Oregon and the Pacific Northwest is the place for homes. Last year the State Chamber of Commerce ran a small classified advertising campaign in Canadian papers, and as a direct result of this 58 families moved to Oregon.
With the advent of the tourist who comes here as a result of national advertising there comes a need for more good roads well kept up. All this development helps the growth of the state. And tourists who come here spend money which makes business better. As business as a whole is better so is the prosperity of the individual better.
But tourists and settlers who come to the state are not the only benefits Oregon obtains from national advertising. There are in Oregon firms whose products are sold in every state of the Union. Their distribution and the volume of their business has been increased

Large Industry Foreseen
Although flax operations at the penitentiary have been in progress only a few years, Governor Pierce and other persons who have observed closely the development of the industry, are of the opinion that it is no longer in an experimental stage and that it will some day become one of the largest resources in the entire west.
Col. W. P. Bartram, who, for many years was closely identified with the flax industry in Canada, said recently that the Oregon climate was well adapted to the growing of flax and that the quality of the product produced in the Willamette valley was equal to, if not better than that grown in Canada and some parts of Ireland.
In an effort to promote the flax industry as rapidly as possible a movement has been launched here for the construction of the largest processing mill in the United States, if plans carry the plant will represent an expenditure of $650,000. Most of the capital already has been subscribed, the investors being prominent men of Salem, Eugene, Albany, Corvallis, Portland and many other cities.

Much Work Ahead of Plant
After being treated in the retting tank for ten days the straw goes through the drying process. It is loaded into trucks, hauled out into the fields and spread out under the sun. There it is left for ten days. Because of the weather conditions in Oregon the drying process is limited to the summer months. When dried the straw again is placed in the sheds, where it remains until sent to the straw breakers and scutchers. The plant was in operation most of last winter and enough flax is now in sight to insure work until late in the spring of 1926.

The payments being made now to the growers is at the rate of slightly above eight and a half cents a pound for the cherries. Following is a copy of the letter.)
"We have completed the cherry pool, and we are herewith handing you statement of your account, with check to balance.
"We wish to advise you at this time, that one car was sold very low. Our records show that this car was in a very good condition when loaded, and the car arrived in New York in bad condition, which, without question, was the fault of the express company, and we are filing claim for the full amount.
"We are also filing claim on other cars that show delay, and
