Mr. R. B. Gray, advertising agent of the Union Pacific at headquarters in Omaha, has been in the northwest for the past two weeks and has just completed a tour of the Puget Sound region, where he has made a careful inspection of all the conspicuous features that usually appeal to the visiting tourist. Before returning east he will make an equally comprehensive review of the Columbia river region and Mr. Hood so as to put him in possession of the big facts into which he will later weave the details of a new publication on the Pacific northwest.

The Union Pacific has issued such a publication annually in addition of 50,000 since the return of the railroads to corporate control, but to keep pace with the country's rapid development and emphasize outstanding features that have in the last few years turned a national limelight on the northwest it is felt that the book should be entirely reconstructed and enlarged.

In connection with this particular activity Mr. Gray calls attention to others of equal magnitude. The Union Pacific advertising appropriation this year is nearly one million dollars and every penny of it is being expended broadcasting to the world the glory of the great Pacific west. Its library of publications is undoubtedly the broadest in scope of any in the railroad life of the nation, and includes every section of the west—even British Columbia and Alaska. These publications are of the highest character. Their treatises are so thorough and up-to-date in relation to history, geography and economic development that some of them have been adopted as text books in many of the schools of the country.

"I have merely mentioned present activities of the Union Pacific," adds Mr. Gray. "Our appropriation for the same purpose will be equally large next year and our work broadened to meet your almost phenomenal growth. I note with particular satisfaction the heroic cooperation of your various chambers of commerce. Their advertising budgets are generous and wisely managed, which must be regarded as the best possible evidence of community faith and effective team work. The methods of their land settlement departments are amazingly complete and might be adopted to splendid advantage by much older commonwealths. With this great united energy of the

INTERESTING NOTES FROM THE COLLEGE

Liming the Soil Was a Well Established Practice in Early Roman Farming

(Here are some excerpts from a current bulletin of the department of industrial journalism of the Oregon Agricultural college.)

"Liming" the soil was a well established practice in early Roman husbandry. Evidence has been found that even the ancients knew the value of limestone soil for producing satisfactory crops.

In some rotation experiments at the Oregon Agricultural college, rotation has resulted in 50 per cent higher yield than was obtained by continuous crops, and the difference is growing larger each year. Beans grown continuously yielded 9.85 bushels an acre, while beans rotated after grain and clover yielded 15.74 bushels an acre.

Very little pruning is ordinarily necessary in the case of the loganberry. If the canes are healthy and vigorous, they may be trained at full length. Occasionally, when
