Katie to the Rescue.

"Something must be done about this at once." Katherine said, and her usually gentle voice was steely with indignation.

"This little mother."-she laid her hand affectionately upon the curly-headed little girl who had done her small test with the baby until Mamie's arrival-"tells me that it was long past time for the baby's feeding when the officers came in-I suppose she was in a hurry to get the hooch finished -and she was hurried off in the car at once. The little thing is starving. We must take it to its mother, or get her here at once." "Dey all starving," Katie struck in. "Mudder too busy to get any dinner, nuddings in house to eat." "My mudder did have some soup on stove, but it got all upset when the mens comed in," the little girl, with a flash of filial pride, defended her absent mother valiantly. I put my arm around the mite and wiped the pitiful tears from her eyes.
