

GOLF CHALLENGES SENATOR SLUGGERS

Effort Will Be Made to Show Up Baseball Team Before Sunday Contest

A challenge issued by G. P. Sharkey, golf professional at the Illihee country club has been accepted by Frisco Edwards, manager of the Salem Senators and a novel competition is being arranged as a preliminary to the Salem-Albany baseball game at Oxford park Sunday.

Sharkey has heard that several of the Senator sluggers pride themselves upon being able to swing a wicked bat and give the horsehide a long journey through the atmosphere. This ability, it is said, is not denied by the bat artists playing with the Senators.

Now Sharkey does not claim to be a baseball player, but when it comes to giving the gutta percha a ride, he believes that he can cut a little more himself and is willing to put the matter to a test.

Edwards is busy looking over the batting averages of his men and will single out the ones that have proven the most proficient with the bat and who are notorious for lung drives.

With a heavy club the Senators selected will lean against the horsehide and the place marked where it comes to a final rest. With a slender wand Sharkey will address the time white oval and with a murmured prayer, or whatever talk the golfer uses upon such occasions, will attempt to land the gutta percha an equality far place if not considerably farther.

Both baseball and golf fans are taking a great amount of interest in the coming event.

AUTO POLO CARS HOLD BIG PARADE

Event at Oxford Park Today for Benefit of Local Boy Scout Council

Auto polo cars bearing the huge push balls that will be used in the contest at Oxford park this afternoon paraded the streets yesterday and from the interest which they created expectations are that a considerable crowd will attend auto features events at the ball park today.

In the pushball games auto polo cars, specially constructed and of the same type that were used in the contests at the state fair grounds last fall, will battle and will single out the ones that have proven the most proficient with the bat and who are notorious for lung drives.

The Scouts are to meet at the public library at 2:15 o'clock before going to the park. The contest itself is scheduled to begin at 2:30 o'clock.

RAY FOR SCHALK—By Will Gould

By Will Gould

They talk about the "iron men" of the ring, "iron men" with the "wing," iron men" with the bat, but here's one behind the bat! Cup your fine, gentle, and give 13 loud "rays" for little Mister Schalk, one for every year spent on the big circuit. Yes, sir, 13 of 'em for blond Ray of the Chibox, iron man backstop of all time, who has celebrated the hoodoo anniversary of his major league debut at the Yankee Stadium.

Way back in 1912, when Chas. Comiskey was looking high and low for a catcher who could hold the smoke and puzzling spitters that came from the trusty right wing of "Big Ed" Walsh, there appeared on the scene the blond youngster mentioned in the paragraph above. It seemed that Billy Sullivan, who had been Walsh's better mate for some time, was ready to hand up the mask and pad, and, as no other Sox catcher had been able to do much with Big Ed's shafts, there was much consternation in the Chicago camp.

Hugh Duffy, then managing Minneapolis, heard of Comiskey's plight and recommended Schalk, who was then engaged in his first year of "pro" baseball under Mr. Comiskey's guidance. After the Old Roman had outbid several major league teams for Ray's services, the youngster reported to the White Sox on August 12, 1912, to catch the renowned Ed Walsh.

One inning was enough to satisfy the big spit-baller that the light haired kid was a diamond in the rough. Big Ed was tickled pink, and he told Comiskey so.

From then on Ray showed them how to catch both the elastic "onion" and the pesky base-stealer as they should be caught. The foul ball never happened that was lost to the uncanny sense developed by this great catcher. All in all, Schalk proved to be the sensation that Walsh thought he'd be.

He has played in more than 190 games per season for a period of 11 years. He shows the way to all backstops when it comes to putouts, assists and nabbing fouls. He is the catcher par excellence.

CHAPTER F91

THE PERPLEXITY THAT FACED KATHERINE AND MADGE

"There are few things so soul-heartening as the gratification of a hunch.

I have heard this sentence from Lillian's lips many times, and the memory of it came back to me illuminatively, as I saw the corner of the pillow which the escaping bootlegger had thrust under a bush below the window he had broken.

When I had asked the youthful state trooper to open the window and let me look out, I had been sure that I would find something of the kind, and the proof of the correctness of my theory was most gratifying. I was vain enough also to experience pleasure in seeing the look of amazement in the young officer's face.

"Well! I'll be swithered!" He amended his expletive with an embarrassed flush. "You're certainly there with the goods, ma'am. Wait till my buddy hears how I missed this bet, and you copped it. But to tell the truth, when we saw that still going, it sort of took our minds off the other fellow."

There was chagrin in his voice, and I hastened to turn the conversational switch, and shunt our talk upon a new track.

"What can be done about this family?" I asked, and the worry in my voice was not assumed, for the plight of the little children in the next room had been tugging
