WESTERN OREGON GRAINS, BY HYSLOP

red winter wheat, a Defiance a white wheat, it always sells on the market as mixed wheat and takes a discount.

Good Spring Oats

Among the oats, probably the Three Grain and the Victory are the best of the spring varieties.

Hannchen a Winner

The real cereal hit of the season, however, was Hannchen barley. Hundreds of acres of Hannchen barley were planted in the frozen out areas. Yields were fine. The Hannchen is a two-row barley that was distributed by the experiment station a good many years ago. It is rather strange that a very large number of farmers who see it in the head or standing in the field are not impressed with its yielding capacity, because it has only two rows of kernels to the head. When the Hannchen barley was first introduced folks would come into my office and ask about barley seed and I would show them a bundle of the Hannchen barley and they rarely ever placed an order. Then I quit showing the bundle and showed them threshed grain, and they very rarely went out without placing an order.

One of the real progressive western Oregon county agents where the freeze-out had been bad induced a good many people in his county to plant the Hannchen barley. It is reported that after they saw it headed out that in a good many cases they were very much dissatisfied, but after the threshing returns were in that they were very happy over having had the variety. It has been in the variety trials at the experiment station since about 1909 and year in and year out has been the prize barley of the lot. In addition to being a very high yielder, it produces a very heavy, thin-skinned kind of barley that is marketable for brewing purposes, as export barley, and that is probably the best of the feed barleys.

A good deal of barley is being purchased this year and it appears that there will be a fairly good export trade. Hannchen has yielded well if it was planted in any sort of season. Most of it was threshed without staining and so the market condition is good. It is such good feed and sells so readily that there is always a danger that neighbrhoods will sell out their seed supply too closely and not have enough for planting. This has been the experience ever since the barley was first introduced into western Oregon. Nearly every year before the season is over folks will want Hannchen barley and the seed is all gone.

Prices Good

The yield of spring grain for western Oregon appears to be better than last year, and the price is also better, on a number of things. The winter grain especially has quite an improved price, although the yield of that crop is not so good.

Portland Quotations Misleading

It is very interesting to note that the published quotations of Portland, which are presumed to be the delivered prices there, are in some cases lower than the actual prices that are being paid in the country. In other cases the country prices are several cents a bushel above quoted prices less the freight charge. The demand for wheat and for barley is good this year, and prices in the country have been good.

The Future

There are a few objectives that the experiment station has in mind in connection with grain development for western Oregon. With White Winter and Jenkin Club we have excellent white wheats for western Oregon use. Our market is primarily a white wheat market and the soft white wheats for pastry flour are probably the best things that we can grow under Willamette valley conditions. We very much need a good white spring wheat and it may be that Federation or Jenkin Club, or some new one will eventually fill this bill. At the present time our best wheat for most of the areas is Huston, a red spring wheat.

In the oat line there is a real need for the development of high class strains of Grey Winter oats, and some of the better yielding varieties of spring oats, such as Three Grain and Victory. In the barley line very good seed stocks have been developed in both O. A. C. No. 7 and O. A. C. 38, and there is a remarkably good acreage of Hannchen. There is from time to time a desire for a good yielding beardless barley, but so far the beardless barleys have not yielded up to the bearded types.

Cultural Needs

There are a few weak points in connection with the grain crop of western Oregon. One is that a great deal of spring wheat was planted to late to fill well. It is always outstanding that the early planted grain makes the best growth and the best crop, and the later the planting the poorer the crop. Where drainage is good February and early March sowing is better than April, and April sowing is better than May, and by the first of May the real sowing season is ended.

For fall sowing, fairly early sowing, as late September or the first half of October is doubtless.

A great many of the grain crop soils are so badly run down that yields are small. Application of manure, rotation with clover or vetch or other legume, and in some cases spring applications of readily available nitrogenous fertilizer, will help, especially if the application is made early.

RUMANIA IS DAMAGED

BUCHAREST.—Heavy damage to property was caused recently in the region of Galatz, when during a storm hailstones as large as hen's eggs fell. The storm extended along the River Sereth into the provinces of Bessarabia, Dobrudja, Tulcea and Kustendje.

In addition to the property damage crops were destroyed in several places.
