COUNTY HIGHWAY QUESTION ENDED

Fairfield-Aral Corner Controversy Is Settled in Portland, Friday

At a meeting in Portland Friday the state highway commission upheld the decision of the Marion county court in the matter of the Fairfield-Aral corner road controversy. The decision rendered by the joint meeting calls for the construction of both strips of highway, each about four miles in length. The matter has been a source of debate between opposing factions in the north end of the county for several months.

When the county paving program was first announced, the county court placed the Fairfield project on the list. A delegation from Woodburn then appeared and advanced arguments to show that the four-mile gap at Aral's corner should also be surfaced. Their request was granted by the county court, and the matter was seemingly at an end. Later the same delegation appeared and demanded that the county cancel the proposed Fairfield paving plan, and surface the Aral road only. No good reasons were given for the change, and the county court refused to concede to the wishes of the delegation. The Woodburn people then carried their case to the state highway commission and demanded that board for an order to have the county grant their demands. The commission issued an invitation to the Marion county court to meet in a joint session and go over the controversy.

It was at this meeting that the county court was upheld in its decision. Work on both roads will start immediately, it was said by county highway officials.

Countess for Day

For a day Victoria Augustynowicz, New York stenographer, and her sister, Mrs. Wanda Dulak, Chicago, who had just been informed by the Polish government that they were countesses of the blood, dreamed of barrels of gold and gems, legendary family treasure. Then, they learned that as Poland is now a republic, the titles were only names; and as for the fortune, well, there wasn't any. Mrs. Dulak is shown.

TRUCK TONNAGE IS ORDERED REDUCED

Loads Hauled Over Columbia Highway Must Be Lighter, Board Says

PORTLAND, Aug. 28.—(By the Associated Press.)—Twenty-five per cent reduction in the weight of automotive truck tonnage allowed on the Columbia highway between The Dalles and the Multnomah county line will become effective October 1, it was decided here today by the state highway commission.

The regulation will limit the truck load weights to 16,500 pounds, including the truck.

The commission decided to call for bids for the following projects, to be opened at the next regular meeting, Tuesday, Sept. 29:

Grading of the Eagle Creek-Rogue River section of the Roosevelt highway, 12 miles, the last stretch of the highway in Curry county to be graded.

Surfacing 16 miles of The Dalles-Columbia River highway from La Pine to Crescent.

Grading five-mile approach to the Crooked river bridge, in Jefferson county.

Clearing 12-mile stretch of road from Ely to Drews Valley section of the Lakeview-Klamath Falls highway.

The commission awarded contracts for new work as follows:

Deschutes county—Grading nine miles, Bend-Lava Butte section, The Dalles-California highway, F. L. Brown, $48,968.

Lane county—Grading 6:15 miles, Sutton Lake-Florence section, Roosevelt highway, Baker & Scharschmidt, $55,732.

Washington county—Paving approaches Dairy Creek bridge, between Hillsboro and Forest Grove, W. D. Andrews Construction company, $10,140.

Umatilla county—Bridge across Umatilla river at Echo, J. D. Tobin, $22,725; bridge across Umatilla at Stanfield, C. J. Montag company, $18,745.

Pending adjustment of a Baker county irrigation project the contract for grading the 12-mile Herford-Mill Gulch section of the Baker-Unity highway was held up. The low bidder on concrete pipe was John Hampshire, $132,532.

CHECK FORGER IS TAKEN

THREE SALEM MEN CAPTURED SUSPECT AT CORVALLIS

Lawrence N. Betts, 24, said to be a paroled convict from the Monroe reformatory in Washington, was placed in the city jail this morning, after he was taken in Corvallis last night on a bad check charge here. He is said to have victimized a number of Salem merchants.

Betts appeared in Salem yesterday and presented a Legion receipt. He cashed this and received some change. It is not known if he is a Legion member. He then cashed a check at the Scotch Woolen Mills store, and one at the Gardner motor sales company. His last one was cashed at the G. W. Johnson clothing store, where he bought a suit of clothes and cashed a check for $37.50. He took the clothes and left on the 1:30 train.

The check was found to be forged, and Cecil Thompson, who had heard Betts say he was going south, started in pursuit of him, accompanied by Wayne Harris and Glen Drager. They located Betts in Corvallis at a dance, and telephoned to Louis Olson, Salem patrolman. He left for Corvallis immediately, and arrested the man. They reached Salem at 1:30 this morning.

Betts is said to have been sentenced to the Monroe reformatory for from six months to 15 years, and was paroled at the end of six months. He is also said to have cashed a large number of bad checks in Portland. He came here Tuesday.
