A banquet was served followed by the country met one day, and one invited the other to dine with him that evening.

At the appointed time the guest set forth in the direction of his friend's house and as the roads in the village were somewhat dimly lighted he took with him his old-fashioned stableman's lantern.

The dinner was good, the wine excellent, and all went merrily. The next morning, however, he received the following note from his host of the night before:

"Dear Old Man: I am sending my man over to you with this note and he takes with him your lantern. If you have quite finished with my parrot and cage, I shall be awfully glad if you will return same per bearer."

In a monarchy the people say, "God save the king." In a republic it is "God pity the country."
