

OLD STAGE COACHES ARE RACED IN FILM

Famous Line Again Revived
in Thrilling Epic of Early Pioneers

Of the three famous old Rock-away Concord stage coaches used by Director John Ford in "The Iron Horse" in the course of production at the William Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood, two have an early history that makes them a curiosity wherever they are shown.

One of the rugged old transportation prizes of the early '60's bears claim to fame as being owned and piloted by Hank Monk, most famous driver of his time and the identical carriage that transported Horace Greeley over the Sierra divide, when he made his maiden trip into the then unknown West.

The other claims the honor of having been held up more regularly by "Black Hart," notorious road agent of the '60's than any other single coach. Having for its duty the danger of transporting the Wells-Fargo coin boxes "Old Bullet-Holes" was the principal objective of the bad man's operations.

Many tales are told of the hand-dit "Black Hart." That he never molested any of the passengers it is recorded, his sole aim being to plunder the money box of the Wells-Fargo company, and perpetrating his bold thefts without the aid of arms.

These two old relics of the days portrayed in the gigantic Fox production are typical of all materials and "props" used by the director in getting the real atmosphere.

J. Farrell MacDonald, Madge Bellamy, George O'Brien, Gladys Hulette, Cyril Chadwick, Will Walling and Fred Kohler play important roles in "The Iron Horse" to be seen at the Heilig theater which gives to the screen a dramatic gem with a theme second to none—the building of the first railroad that linked the East to a great country with the great and then practically unknown West.

Time signals sent out by telegraph from the Naval Observatory are seldom in error by as much as two-tenths of a second, while the average error is less than five-hundredths of a second.

SPECIAL SHOW FOR WOMEN TO BE HELD

Great Koran to Be Presented in Special Matinee This Afternoon

Starting at 2 p. m. today there will be a special matinee for women only at the Bligh theater and the final performance tonight of "Koran," the mental wonder.

The greatest question in life is that of the future and in the gypsy camp, on the stage, at the circus, the fair grounds and even metropolitan office buildings may be found clairvoyants, crystal gazers and others who purport to tell what the future holds for those who seek their counsel.

"The Great Koran" returns the crystal gazer to the local stage. The act was a decided success as the seer answered questions which were contained in sealed envelopes, written by people in the audience.

His ability to give so much detail relative to the person who had written the question as well as answer it as fully as he, was amazing and attempting to figure out just how the act is really done was an intriguing study for skeptical members of the audience. The act is staged with an India setting and the crystal gazer is assisted by two young women.

TENNIS ENTRIES TAKEN MUCH INTEREST SHOWN IN ANNUAL CITY TOURNAMENT

Much interest is being displayed in the annual Salem tennis tournament which will be played here Saturday. Entries are coming in fast and many more are expected to place their names before the closing day.

Those wishing to enter the women's singles may do so by handing in their names to Mrs. Adolph Greenbaum. Other entries will be taken care of by the Brown Sporting Goods store.

The city tennis courts are filled each evening with aspirants to local laurels. A number of prominent players will take part in the match.

The United States used about 400,000 tons of stone for building monuments and gravestones last year.
