into California, of the luncheon given for them by Harry Noyes Pratt, and of their visit to the Writers' club in Berkeley. In connection with Mr. Pratt, Mrs. Thayer showed a picture and a poem, painted and written by this literary man, and presented some years ago to her husband while they were living in Berkeley. The program of the evening opened with Grace Elisabeth Smith presiding. Mrs. Mary B. Kells read two poems, "Doubt" and "The Glacial Period." Charles J. Lisle read a short story on which he has been working for some time, "The End of the World." Perry Reigelman, "Love" and "Autumn Love." Mrs. E. S. Barton re-read one of her most delightful lyrics, "Scotch Broom." Albert Rol, a student of the technique of the short story, gave the synopsis for a novelette which he will entitle "That French Girl." Miss Florence Jones read a thoroughly delightful story, "Battered Frills." Mrs. J. C. Nelson read a group of three poems, "Fancies," "The Woodland Cove," and "A Picture From My Window."

Others in the group for the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Paulus, Mrs. W. F. Fargo, Miss Marie Roberts, Miss Reneka Swart, Miss Maude Covington, Miss Eugenia Zeller, and the hostess, Mrs. Claudius Thayer. S. of V. Miss Louise Williamson entertained at her house over the week-end Miss Conklin of Portland. My Husband's Love Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE Copyright by Newspaper Feature Service CHAPTER F116 THE EMERGENCY THAT EVERYONE ROSE TO MEET Katherine came running back with some tiny pellets and a glass of water. In her other hand she gingerly bore a metal tray holding a tiny electric grill still hot. Mother Graham's eyes followed mine to it, and realization came to us both of the means by which Katherine had been able to produce boiling water at the very instant of Junior's imperative need of it. "You must have kept that going all night!" Mother Graham exclaimed. "Only since I went to bed," Katherine answered, "and it was turned to lowest heat."

"Dye think I meant to consider the cost?" Mother Graham snapped, and I knew she was sincere, exactly as if she had meant that very thing. "Of course not," Katherine returned soothingly. "Will you please attend to it here somewhere? I must have hot water constantly from now on."

"Don't be frightened," she said, "that's something like a fire. You wouldn't have had it for an hour if you had let that girl monkey with it." Prudently Katherine and I held our tongues, although both of us knew that Katie would have had a quality as good a fire in as short a time, and with much less fussing. I paid tribute to my mother-in-law's efficiency, nevertheless. The fire, a roaring, thoroughly effective blaze, was built, and Katie had been released for necessary service elsewhere. And Mother Graham had no sooner raised herself from her knees and dusted her hands off, than she began making plans like a strategic general. "Don't be frightened."

"Don't you want the crib in here?" she asked as she sat down in a low chair and drew on her thick woolen stockings, and comfortable leather slippers—with the martyr-like insistence of the older generation in being uncomfortable in any emergency, she had remained in her night dress and with bare feet while the excitement was on. "Yes," Katherine answered, "but for that we can wait until Jim arrives." "Don't you want to fix up a croup tent?" "Surely, but this other process will do very nicely until we get the other done, and a few minutes won't matter, one way or the other. There, there, Junior, don't be frightened! Aunt Katie'll take the old choke away." Her quick eyes had detected the beginning of another spasm, and with deft hands she again put the blanket of steaming fluid beneath the blanket which Mother Graham hid, and soothed the child's tortured throat. For the next hour and a half the room was a battle ground. Jim, quiet, effective, brought wood for the fire, and set up Junior's crib, which I noted could not have been used since I left home. The child evidently had been sleeping in his grandmother's bed during my entire absence, a proceeding directly contrary to my ideas of hygiene, but which there was no slightest use trying to combat. "But although I could not give assent to some of my mother-in-law's ideas, I admired her crisp efficiency as she aided Katherine in preparing the croup tent—an ingenious arrangement of sheets over the crib—and stood by, a tower of strength, while we fought the horrible choking spasms which were wearing Junior's strength down. CHAPTER F117 THE REASON MOTHER GRAHAM TOOK ALL THE BLAME "There!" said Katherine, at last, in a hushed whisper. "I fought the horrible choking spasms which were wearing Junior's strength down."
