SALEM'S PAPER MILL GROWING BETTER, BIGGER

Every day, in every way, Salem's paper mill grows better and better and bigger and bigger—
 And this growth goes on without end.

In the past year there have been some distinct advances made. Most important of all, C. F. Beyerl, manager, and J. B. Wilt, sulphite superintendent, have succeeded in developing a process whereby red and Douglas fir may be converted into high grade papers as easily and cheaply by the sulphite process as white fir and hemlock—

And as a consequence an almost unlimited quantity of additional pulp wood which was formerly considered unfit for paper due to its resinous nature, is now available to keep the Salem mill running indefinitely.

Next most important, perhaps, is the fact that the Salem mill now makes the highest grade paper and bleached sulphite on the coast; and it makes a quality of bleached sulphite fit for the making of artificial silk. No other mill in the United States reaches this perfection, so far. The eastern mills making artificial silk get their bleached sulphite from Sweden.

There are a number of important minor improvements, made in the past year and in the process of being made now, as the reader will observe in the news articles on the Slogan pages this morning.

The world will always need paper, and paper is made from cellulose, and cellulose is found in every vegetable growth in the world that has fiber and will stand up; from the giant of the forest, 5000 years old to the weed in the garden that springs up in the night—

So there will always be a demand for the articles of commerce made at the Salem paper mill, and there will always be raw products for the manufactured articles, as long as water runs and grass grows.

In the first place, Salem is in the center of what has been called by Major F. W. Leadbetter the largest supply in the world of pulp wood. Nature is constantly providing reforestation here, and this process will be assisted more in the future than it has been in the past—so there will likely be a plentiful supply of this wood for all time, and this is the most profitable raw supply material now known—

But if the experiments of the scientists shall find a cheaper supply, our paper mill will be ready for it, as the product of our showers and sunshine and prolific soil.

It is doubtful if there is one in a hundred, or five hundred, of our home people who half realize the scientific romance of paper making; the wonderful and intensely interesting magic of the chemical and mechanical processes involved in the turning of trees standing in the forest this week into the beautiful and valuable products of commerce, speeded to distant markets next week. There is an inkling of all this in the Slogan pages this morning—but it can be only an inkling. It is worthy of your study, this entrancing subject.

The following high lights will give some idea of what this great and growing institution means to this city and community:

There are directly employed in the mill, and furnishing raw materials for the mill, here in Salem and in the Salem district, about 400 men. Counting five to the family, this means about 2,000 people here dependent upon the paper mill operations for their living—

Or about one in every 13 of our population.
 The reader can give his own estimate of the indirect benefits, in more ways than he could think of in an hour's study; the butcher and baker and candlestick maker, and the teacher and lawyer and preacher, and all the rest who indirectly benefit from the operations of such a plant.

The Salem paper mill uses more than three times as much water as is used in all Salem besides—

About as much electricity as all the rest of Salem uses, with its 170 and more motors going 24 hours of each working day.

The mill payroll is well above $40,000 a month.
 It pays over $32,000 a month for cord wood.

The success of the paper mill of the Oregon Pulp and Paper company is the more gratifying on account of the fact that it is very largely a Salem enterprise, and has been from the beginning. It is largely owned and managed and manned by Salem people. Its profits as well as its money paid out for labor and raw materials are largely distributed here, adding most substantially to our business life in very many ways and making Salem a bigger and better city, and the surrounding country more and more prosperous.

Do you wonder that the managers and workers take a pride in the great plant? Every citizen of Salem would be fully justified in feeling something of this pride. That sort of a sentiment would be an asset to Salem. It would help in advertising Salem to the world as a city that is far above the average, in its worth while accomplishments and advantages and future prospects.

IS THE FARMER PROSPEROUS?

Heralded everywhere through the daily press is the claim of returned prosperity for agriculture. And the truth about returning prosperity cannot be questioned after comparing the present economic conditions with those effecting the farmer at the lowest point of depression two or three years ago.

Agricultural prosperity, however, like the prosperity which affects every other industry is a matter of degrees. To say that any industry or business is prosperous simply because either prices or crops or both are better than formerly may not mean that even now there is prosperity. Nor is a grower of farm products or the manufacturer of goods prosperous when the cost of delivering the products or goods to the consumer leaves little or no margin of profit after the cost of labor, raw materials and other expenses are deducted, even though the selling price is high.

Neither the farmer, livestock breeder nor any other producer is prosperous unless he is making more money than his immediate requirements for there are losses and depreciation to be met.

The producer must, in order to be really prosperous, receive for his efforts, investments and responsibilities: adequate wages for himself, reasonable rate of interest and fair profit on his investment.

Economic conditions for the farmer have greatly improved but there is need for still further improvement. And for this purpose efficient production, lower transportation and cooperative marketing should be persistently sought.

Bits For Breakfast

The best paper mill—
 Best on this coast, is the Salem paper mill—

But it is never good enough for its progressive management, so no month goes by without improvements. That is the way to build up the best paper mill in the world.

The Salem paper mill is much better housed than most institutions of its kind. Its main building is a credit to Salem, by day and by night.

How many people in Salem have not been through their paper mill? It is one of the most interesting institutions in the world. An up to date paper mill like this performs a miracle every minute, transforming wood into the various kinds of high class paper.

Bustling times at the state fair grounds. Things are being whipped into shape out there.

Mrs. Olmstead is already serving meals at the big restaurant. It is the largest ever on the grounds—with the largest seating capacity and the most extensive equipment, and the best furnished.

This is the day for the organization of the second paper mill for Salem—a milestone in the industrial history of this city.

But the book, which he has entitled "The Moral Self," is evidently a very excellent one, as three publishers have been bidding for the right to publish it.

The book was written with the view in mind of being able to adapt it to class work. It is original in almost all of its aspects, rather than a re-hashing of the ideas of others who have written upon the subject.

Professor Sherman has two other manuscripts ready for publication which are to be released soon. One is entitled "The Relation Between Herbert Spencer's Social and Educational Philosophy." The name of the third book has not yet been determined.

Professor Sherman has been head of the philosophical department at Willamette university for over 10 years, and during that time he has received offers from several eastern universities to join their faculties, but he has stayed with Willamette because of the high ideals it espoused.
