were floated out into the water. Captain Diehl said he sounded his whistle, cut his speed and reversed his engines immediately after sighting the S-51 on his starboard bow, close in.

He asserted that the submarine continued full speed ahead and the collision came "a second later." The submarine was hit half way between stem and conning tower and sank within a minute.

into the sea at once, said the captain, and in six or seven minutes a boat had been launched. The three men rescued were the only ones sighted. The survivors said they thought others may have been forced out of the S-51. The captain saw only one light on the submarine and the whole thing happened so quickly that he could not tell just where it was located.

The only evidence of damage to the City of Rome was the appearance of scratches on the starboard side. Inspectors will examine her before she sails on her return trip to Savannah.

Captain John H. Diehl of the steamer told his story.

"I had been in the cabin," he said, "writing and making up my log. I came up on deck and saw a white light off to the starboard. I watched it for a minute and called it to the attention of the lookout who thought it was a tug going west. I had about come to the conclusion that it was a rum runner when I observed that it was coming toward us rapidly.

"Suddenly a red light flashed from the other vessel, meaning that she was going to cross our bow. There was only one thing to do, I ordered the steamer way over to port and the engines reversed, at the same time sounding warning whistles.

"It was too late. Forty-five seconds later we crashed into her. In 15 seconds more the submarine had sunk. We threw overboard ring buoys and had a boat down in six or seven minutes. Our searchlight failed us after a moment, evidently burned out. The three men rescued were all we sighted."

Passengers on the City of Rome confirmed the captain's statement of the suddenness of the collision and the speed with which the submarine sank. They did not even see the submarine, but they heard cries for help.

The steamer was in no danger. An examination of her hull after she had docked showed only a slight indentation on the starboard side below the water line and a corresponding slight bulge on the port side and a few scratches.

Informed that Secretary Wilbur of the navy felt that the City of Rome should have remained on the spot, Captain Diehl said that he would willingly have stayed all night and day at the scene had there been any indication that his remaining would have served a useful purpose.

"I couldn't do any good," he said, "I did everything possible. I circled round and round. I didn't start ahead until 11:45.

"I circled around the spot on slow belt. I didn't dare to sail over it. I drifted over the spot once, but nothing came up and nothing happened.

"I was going to lay to and assemble a buoy with some sort of anchor, but I thought the oil on the water was sufficient. I could see the oil spot on the water for a quarter of a mile. I feel there is not the need for the least bit of criticism. I did all in my power."

This drugless method called Laveo kills the germ in three minutes, yet is positively harmless to the most delicate tissues. Your head and lungs are cleared like magic. Sufferers are relieved in a single night. To prove it and to introduce Laveo to a million sufferers in one month, I offer to send a treatment free and postpaid to any one who will write for it. horticultural products will be placed, many more counties than ever before shipping exhibits. These will demonstrate the industries of the various localities and will prove, it is thought, the best kind of advertising. No prizes will be awarded, but each county making a creditable display will be given $100 by the fair board. The floral exhibit, in this building, will be the finest in years, being put on by all the leading florists of the state.

The south wing of the main building will house what is undoubtedly the most interesting and attractive exhibit ever put on in the state fair art department. This will comprise 250 of the best photographs shown at the recent Pacific International Photographers' convention in San Francisco.

The automobile show will be outstanding, with the auto style show and parade arranged as a feature Saturday, attracting the attention of leading dealers as well as individual owners of fine cars. The machinery sheds will be full to overflowing; the educational building will house its largest and most comprehensive exhibits, including all the state institutions, the Oregon Agricultural college and the state industrial clubs.

Many more boys and girls are expected to exhibit this year than heretofore, entering both in the club division and in the open classes. They will occupy their new building on the grounds, and will have many things of an entertainment nature arranged for their pleasure.

A number of visitors of note will be honored during the week as guests of the state fair board. An invitation has been extended to Governor Rollin Hartley of Washington to be present on Wednesday, Salem and Governor's day, and it is expected that he will respond favorably. Governor Walter M. Pierce will be a guest of honor on this date, the derby being a feature race for him. The winning horse will be crowned by Miss Eva J. Sande of Salem, a sister of Earle Sande, America's premier jockey. On Thursday Miss Virginia Ringler, queen of the recent Gresham fair, and her retinue of attendants, will be entertained by the fair board.

Special rates have been granted on all railroad and stage lines and it is fully expected that each day, arranged for the various organizations in the state, will attain a high water mark in point of attendance.

State fair tomorrow—

And it will be the best and biggest yet.

There is a wonderful spirit among subscribers to the second linen mill for Salem. There are already voluntary applications for shares of stock. The time will soon come when it will all be sold, and when it will command a big premium.

H. M. Mead, the Polk county bee king, is to be on the state fair grounds with a lunch room just east of the new pavilion, where he is specializing in honey and honey foods. That is a good way to push the bee industry here.

The horse show at the state fair will commence Tuesday evening. There will be five big nights of it.

Prepare to make Salem day (Wednesday) the big day at the fair. We did it one year. Can do it again.

"Believing that the bulk of the acreage of a certain Oregon county was owned by a railroad, the people hurried to the polls to vote large bonds for road building on the theory that the railroad would have to pay the bonds and the interest. Now it is discovered that the land belongs to the government, and since this means the burden falls on those who voted the expense, they are demanding relief. It was ever thus. Soak a big corporation if you can, and then yell when the boomerang returns."—New York Commercial. (What Oregon county is indicated?)

England is having a sort of world's fair called the Wembley exhibition. While Queen Mary was looking it over the other day, a little boy broke away from his parents and ran up to her, holding out his hand and asking eagerly, "How is my king; is he better?"

* * * Some time ago King George had an attack of bronchitis and the doctors sent him off on a cruise for his health. The little fellow had fallen ill at the same time. It was a touching exhibition of the veneration which the average Englishman has for royalty, and the queen, taking the boy's hand and patting his head, thanked him gravely, just as one would have thanked an older person, and told him King George was very much better. To every loyal Briton this incident was the big story of the week.
