

EMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

NEW YMCA NOT CONVENIENTLY LOCATED FOR WORK

At a meeting of the board of directors of the local YMCA Thursday, it was decided that the new YMCA building is not centrally located for employment work, so a room down town will be used for that function.

A committee consisting of T. M. Hicks, R. J. Hendricks, and A. A. Lee was appointed to work out the problem of the new location for the employment bureau, and also to discover a way of meeting the cost of maintaining the office. Employment is a big thing for the local YMCA. Approximately 6000 men and women yearly being given employment. The actual cost of maintaining the office is $1800 a year, $720 of which is paid by the federal government. It is up to the committee to determine the best way of obtaining the remaining $1080.

From the local office men are sent all up and down the Willamette valley for employment, and the task is such an important one that the YMCA has seen best to retain the service.

no injury of any sort. He was resting easily at his apartment in a hotel and physicians who had earlier believed he could not don a uniform again until Sunday decided he would be fit and ready for service tomorrow.

So far as the twirling staffs are concerned Harris and McKechnie both regard the delay as a benefit, although it did not change the plans originally laid down by the rival boards of strategy for the third game. After an afternoon of deep thinking among the master minds, it was assured that tomorrow's tussle would find Alex Ferguson, Washington's veteran right hander and master of the "screw ball" opposed to Ray Kremer, a comparative newcomer to the major leagues, but a seasoned moundman never the less.

This probably will result in McKechnie calling on his young southpaw star, Emil Yde for Sunday's game. Harris for that day, may rely on his veteran port sider, Wacch Ruesther, although Johnson and Lee Meadows, opponents in the first game, will have had three days' rest, enough to permit either to go back into the fray.

STATE SCORES IN TRIAL OF MURRAY

keeper at the prison, followed Newman on the witness stand. He declared he owned the only .32-20 calibre Smith & Wesson revolver kept in the prison arsenal, the same size and model pistol said to have been taken by Murray in his flight. This gun, Miller stated, was missing after the escape, and was discovered in Murray's possession at his capture in Centralia. The gun was identified by Miller by the sight, especially filed for him, and by a chip in the handle.

"Was this gun in the prison arsenal on the afternoon and evening of August 12?" the district attorney asked.

"It was," Miller declared.

"Was it loaded?"

"It had five loaded cartridges in the cylinder. The hammer was on an empty chamber. It was loaded with standard Winchester ammunition."

"After Murray was returned to the prison, following his break, did you have any conversation with him regarding this revolver," Mr. Carson asked.

"I did," Miller replied. "I had heard that the gun was not in good condition, and asked Murray about it. He said that it was in perfect working condition and that it was a 'good shooting gun'."

The state will attempt to prove that it was a bullet from this gun that ended the life of John Sweeney, for whose death Murray is being tried. X-ray photographs taken of Sweeney's head before the bullet was removed, have already been offered by the state. The bullet, in the photograph, is said to have shown peculiar markings, corresponding with the markings found on the bullet removed from Sweeney's brain, and offered in evidence by the state.

Other bullets fired from the same gun, are declared to show the same peculiar identifying marks. The bullet found in the dead guard's head was of .32-20 calibre.

was also called to the stand, and described what he saw of the prison break.

"The first shot I heard was from the turnkey's office, I believe it was directed toward tower seven. Immediately after, some shots were fired into tower one."

"I next saw Murray and Jones," the witness said. "Jones was working the lever of a Winchester as fast as he could. Murray appeared to be coaching Kelley and Willos. Murray had three revolvers, two in his belt and one in his hand. The next thing I saw was Milt Holman fall. Then I saw Murray throw Willos a revolver. Murray, Kelley and Willos then ran across the yard to the oak tree. Murray was first. They were shooting into tower one. Murray was shooting from the right side of the tree. Someone else was shooting from the left side. There was also some shooting from the tower. Murray was shooting with a 'short gun.'"

"I then saw Jones run past them under the tower; the other three followed. They were apparently undecided as to the next move. They then rushed up the steps of the guard tower, with Jones in the lead and Murray following. Murray apparently was hit. I saw him stop, shake himself, grasp his arm, and change his gun from one hand to the other. They were shooting into the tower, and also at some one outside of the fence."

Robinson also declared that in a conversation with Murray, the defendant told him that "he was through doing time" and that "he had been planning this break for four months." Murray is also said to have stated that they had planned taking two guards as hostages. "What if we didn't go," Davidson says he asked Murray. "It would be too bad if you didn't go," Murray is said to have stated.

Z. J. Zinn, driver of the commandeered car in which the convicts escaped, took the stand, and told of taking the men into the Willard district. The convicts, he said, first directed him to take them into Polk county, but later changed their minds, and turned back.

Mrs. Alice Osberg, employed at the state hospital, declared that she was accosted by Murray, Kelley and Willos as they ran from the prison. William H. McElroy was with her at the time.

"Say lady, we've done an awful thing," Murray told her, she said. "We've just killed a man at the pen. Come and show us the highway. The guards will be after us and they won't shoot a woman. Come along or we'll kill both of you. We won't hurt you if you come."

Zinn, who preceded Mrs. Osberg on the stand, told of conversations he overheard in the car. According to Zinn, Murray talking to one of his companions stated: "I waited until the guard came from behind the pillar. I took rest and hit him between the eyes." The state maintains that the guard mentioned was Sweeney. Murray is also said to have stated "I called to Savage to come, but he didn't. I took a crack at him, but missed him."

Murray, in court yesterday, again occupied himself by taking notes of the testimony, and handing them to his attorneys. On several occasions, Will R. King, one of the defense counsel added to his cross examination as a result of pencil notes handed to him by the accused convict.

The state has now presented about half of its witnesses. It is believed that the case will not go to the jury until Wednesday or Thursday. No intimation has been given by the defense as to the length of time they will take in presenting their side of the case.
