THE FILBERT BOOM IS JUSTIFIED

The annual filbert Slogan number survey of the filbert industry in the Salem district justifies the enthusiasm of the leading men engaged in growing this wonderful nut; this hazelnut with a college education-

Shows that the filbert boom here is one that is justifying and will continue to justify itself. It is estimated that 2000 acres are now devoted to filbert growing in the Salem district, but most of the trees are young, and it may be said to be still in the class of an infant industry.

The boom will justify itself up to 10,000 acres of our land, to say the least, for, at a ton to the acre average production, it will require that acreage to supply the home demand; to replace the 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 pounds of erior foreign filberts which we annually import.

But it is easy to foresee that a market may readily be d for twice or three or four or ten times that tonnage ir superior filberts, by using the methods of advertising exploiting that are employed by the California walnut like you, however, although I can culture of chrysanthemums in the

The pioneers of the industry have blazed the way; have borne the brunt of time-killing experimentation. The new grower has the immense benefits of this work of the pioneers.

Pollination is the big thing in filbert growing. This matter has resolved itself down to about the following:

Plant Barcelona filberts, with enough DuChilly trees to pollenize them, with enough Clackamas or Davidinia (or Daviana) to pollenize the DuChillys. There are some newer pollenizers that will no doubt be heard from in the future in the industry; when enough trees shall have been produced to make them generally available. There are also some new seedling varieties that look promising—that may provide nuts of a quality to compete with the Barcelona, which is so far our premier commercial filbert.

George A. Dorris of Springfield, who may be appropriately called the father of the filbert industry in this country, in an article a couple of years ago, said:

"Filbert culture in Oregon has made such progress that it is no longer necessary to guess at what yields will be. The block of twenty-five Barcelonas I planted twenty-one years ago, some of them replants of probably not more than eight to ten years of age, has this year brought the average yield for three years to between thirty-four and thirty-five hundrad nounds per acre. Eleven year old trees, this year, e rate of about two thousand pounds per acre. s, which are not excessive and can be easily she said wistfully, as I left. The growing of filberts and walnuts in the Salem district is bound to bring up land values. For the purpose of culti- bewildered at the glimpse I had vating these nut trees, hundreds of thousands of acres of our behind the scenes of my neighland is worth ten to twenty times the present selling pricespotentially worth such great advances in price.

If you live in some other district, or some other state or country, you can afford to give this matter consideration.

One thing more: The filbert tree never grows old. It renews itself every year, like the walnut tree. Filbert and nine Marks. But when with a few walnut trees put out now, of the right varieties, with proper pollenizers, in the Salem district, will grow more fruitful and the humiliating fact that I did not roughout all the years of your life, and the n and childrens children, down through ading years of the future.

"Yes, there are. I'm sure I'd like to see somebody that looks a single flower resembling the water lot like me. But I never was out beyond Rockaway on Long Island in my life."

I made a mental comment that she might well be speaking the literal truth, even though I was convinced that she indeed was the original of the photograph I had seen. But I gave voice only to the most banal reply.

"It does appear so," I returned noncommittally, and the next minute I was in my own rooms, a bit bor's life, and fully resolved to keep away from her vicinity as much as possible.

I told myself that this resolve had its inception in Dicky's vehemently expressed disapproval of both the masculine and the femismall sticks I had managed a small fire in the front of it, I faced wish Dicky to meet the girl, Mollie, whose fresh young beauty was so unusual and of a type which I knew was most appealing to my artist husband.

That Mollie was an intimate of the Marks household was patent. Sooner or later, in the common hallway or on the stairs, Dicky in all probability would encounter meeting, though I fully realized the meaning as well as the absurdity of the fear.

It was not a happy time which spent before my poor apology for a fire, waiting for Dicky's rehe had so narrowly missed going. I suppose most wives have had similar unpleasant sessions with of loneliness and uneasiness helping to make things interesting.
