The cultivated nut groves are now getting ready for the dormant season, with their coats of brown and bright yellow and green on filberts and walnuts, and as the leaves drop the sage green colored catkins or mole flowers on the filbert are more noticeable as the same appear in all sizes of score of well established groves that were growing well and where good pollenizing varieties were growing in close proximity to the Barclona, which is the present commercial standby type and the DuChilly type nuts were plentiful. It was especially noticeable where there was a scarcity of pollenizer. more blanks or partially meated nuts were present. We hope by a few more years of study of the now practical nut growers that this ever existing necessity of proper pollenizers will be on the right track of its probable solution, as what is thought best this season may not be so successful next' blooming period.

As the 1924 convention was over we visited some groves the first week in December. One seedling grove had four trees in full bloom, both sexes, with honey bees gathering pollen (as there is no nectar on the filbert?). The buzz was like a day "knee deep ing June:" This was a revelation to me, to see the busy bee working each shining hour, and proved blooming period extending from the last week in November through all of December, January, February and part of March, on the many now known varieties.

Walnuts bloom in April, May and June, chestnuts in June and July, making nine months of nut bloom per annum. The other time catkins are visible and in the making, so there is always something nature is developing in nuts. All it wants is some encouragement and work on your part. We visited one grove at about 900 feet elevation, well loaded; another at 700 feet above sea level with four varieties, mostly Barcelona, and a few DuChilly type, some White Aveline and a liberal number of Daviana-all trees loaded. This was the most ideal crop of nuts seen this year. Not a loafer on this job, and if this can be carried out every year the problem will be solved. May the years that are before us result in getting the best nut growing state in the front rank where it justly belongs. Our own grove did well this year. My trees had three feet of new growth. We do not encourage single standard trunks at the ground and with our 47 varieties we hope to get somewhere. Yours respectfully,

H. A. HENNEMAN,

The industrial center of the United States is rapidly gravitating to Oregon because of the marvelously favorable conditions and prodigality of resources. World markets are opening before us like the first pink of an opening rosebud. Every dollar spent for "OREGON QUALITY" products stimulates it into full and refulgent bloom.
