STORY OF ROY FUKUDO IS FOOD FOR THOUGHT

(The following story of Roy Fukuda, of Lake Labish, appeared in the Sunday Oregonian, and for the first time gives some of the interesting side lights of the character of Mr. Fukuda, who has made a notable success of his work with the soil and his marked ability to find markets where nonenone existed before. A more comprehensive review is to appear in an eastern magazine, from which The Statesman is permitted to quote a few items. Through a slip of the typewriter of the fingers of the printer it was stated in the Oregonian that Mr. Fukuda, upon arrival in this country 32 years ago, received from a farmer the sum of $14 per week for labor. As a matter of fact, it was one dollar per week that he received, and as some of us recall that this was Oregon at low tide, when Cleveland and low prices prevailed, it is in keeping with other data of the times.

Mr. Fukuda, although completing five years of intensive study in Japan, where only two weeks vacation are allowed during the entire year, had not mastered English when he arrived in the United States, and he, with five other men, bought a barn in a little settlement in Idaho, remodeled it into a schoolhouse and hired a teacher, where he studied two years. He was then 22 years old. Returning to Oregon he engaged in hop raising near Brooks, where he lost $10,000 in the vicissitudes that overtook growers some years ago. But the word "failure" is not in Mr. Fukuda's dictionary, and he cast about for new lines of endeavor. The story of his celery growing is pretty well known, but there are few who know how much so-called bad luck he has encountered even there, with various pests and weather conditions that would have discouraged many a man.

Mrs. Fukuda, who is mentioned briefly in the article, is also a plant scientist, doing some clever work in Japan, such as grafting Morning Glories upon potato vines and during one of the exceptionally busy years at the farm she personally set out 3,000 celery plants, although she is generally occupied with her household cares just as any American woman whose first concern is her children. The children are very much American. They speak only English, and when they attempt to converse in Japanese they amuse their father, who finds their Japanese so "broken," as to be funny. The Japanese people and the Koreans, (S. O. Kim and others,) are greatly respected by those who know them. They frequently bring all the pupils from the Perkins and Kaiser schools, distributing them at their homes in a careful manner, and when they encounter a neighbor walking along the roads they do ot merely give him a lift as far as they happen to be going in his direction, but carry him to his destination. When you see them coming to your gate you know they are never coming after something, but instead they come bearing gifts from their gardens. Following is the Sunday Oregonian article mentioned above:)

"CELERY KING" OF QUINABY RECLAIMS WASTE LAND

Roy Fukuda, Once Penniless Lad, Manages 2000-Acre Farm

If there should ever be a book of "Who's Who" at Quinaby, on the first page would appear the name "Roy Fukuda, celery king, onion lord and lettuce magnate." Last week Mr. Fukuda made a single shipment of seven cars of celery and his gardens in the Labish beaver-dam lands do show much of a bare spot, the total to be harvested this season just beginning being estimated at 200 cars of celery, 20 cars of onions and 10 cars of lettuce.

Mr. Fukuda has 18 farmers or gardeners employed, and they in turn have many helpers, for while all belong to an organization known as the Labish Meadows Celery union, upon the king (Mr. Fukuda) falls the burden of seeing that exactly right upon the 2000 acres of land he has under lease. And just here is where a few extra bouquets should be handed him, since practically the entire acreage was waste, gopher-infested, or marshland until put to work on the crop that brings a million dollars to Oregon every year.

Coming to Portland when 18 years old from his birthplace, Okayama, Japan, this lad, without money friends, relatives, and unable to speak English, sought and obtained work with a farmer at $1.00 a week and board, buying his own clothing. Today, 32 years later, United States senators call upon him, railroad presidents write to him, editors and their wives visit his home, finding of pleasing personality and his family as charming as could be found in the highest social circles. He has a wife and four children. Before the age of 13, Jesse, a daughter, finished the eighth grade at school and has entered high school, attending business college during vacation, so that she is now able to help her father with his large correspondence, while Susia, Mamie and Frank have shown the same remarkable aptitude for learning and getting ahead in the world that has made their father a notable and respected resident of Quinaby.

MY HUSBAND'S LOVE

on the gas-plate," I said calmly, clearing off the table and unpacking my purchases. I paid no more heed to his tirade than if he had not spoken, for I held two trump cards in my hand, one of which I played by unwrapping my parcels and revealing to Dicky the chickens and my other purchases, each a favorite dish of his. I saw his eyes light up involuntarily.

"What you trying to do—hand me a cross-word puzzle to solve?" he snapped, but much of the truculence had oozed out of his voice.

"No, indeed," I answered soothingly, and then I explained my arangement with the janitor's wife.

"Of course, if you insist upon aking them to a restaurant, why I'll cook the dinner and try to keep the dishes until we can eat them up later," I said meekly, "but I am afraid Harriet will object to having Edwin eat in a restaurant. You know how particular she is about his meals. But you can settle that with her when she gets here. Perhaps you can persuade her."

I had played my second trump card and I waited tensely to hear Dicky's reaction to it.
