Maccabees Organize New Ladies' Hive
George G. Pell, district manager for central Oregon, with the help of Mrs. Nellie O'Shea, Charles Chandler and Howard Fenner organized the first ladies' hive in Oregon at the McCormick hall last night. Twenty-six ladies were obligated and were given the secret work of the Maccabees. Officers were elected and installed as follows: Past commander, Marie David; commander, Irene M. Pell; lieutenant commander, Mae Kenyon; record keeper, Hilda Butler; chaplain, Clara Reeves, sergeant, Minnie Chandler; physicians, Dr. Hobson and Dr. Backstrand; master at arms, Nellie O'Shea; first master guards, Zella Ackerman; second master guards, Amber Jacobs; sentinel, Hazel Shepard; picket, Elma Wilson.

This new hive started off with a full charter list, and after the officers were installed the ladies served refreshments and then enjoyed themselves until the early hours of the morning.

Other hives will soon be organized in many cities of the Willamette valley in the near future, and with the Maccabees now writing men, women and children all under one management it is sure to become a factor in the Willamette valley.

HOW MADGE WON DICKY OVER TO HER DINNER-PARTY PLAN

At my comment that Dicky might persuade his sister, Mrs. Braithwaite, to a restaurant dinner instead of the home affair which I had planned, the wrathful expression faded from his face and was replaced by one of distinct uneasiness. Harriet Braithwaite inherits the Graham obstinacy untrammelled by Dicky's temper. Elizabeth's placid hypocrisy or her mother's fussiness. Dicky himself often has said that Scott's famous couplet:

"Come one, come all, this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as I."

might well have been written about his elder sister. I knew that if he believed my statement concerning Harriet's antipathy to restaurant food for her distinguished surgeon husband, my victory was won.

I was not prepared, however, as I am in the multitudinous moods of my volatile husband, to see amused mockery in the dancing eyes which he suddenly turned upon me.

"I'll tell the world you're good," he intoned fervently. "First you spread out those chickens and fixings, so your poor old Adam's mouth will begin to water, and then you remind me delicately of Harriet's well-known mulishness. Well! you win, old dear. I'll agree to your Dickensian dinner party, but don't get it into your head that you're putting anything over on me, for you're not, and just let it percolate through your cranium that I'm no Micawber either. If your dinner doesn't turn out well, I can't save it with a marvelous impromptu sauce."

Madge is Embarrassed. I was furious at the flush which rushed to my cheeks, for Dicky had struck home. I had tried to circumvent his opposition to my home dinner while keeping him in ignorance of my attempt, and his recognition of my ruse was as exasperating as it was embarrassing. But I determined to go down with colors flying, and I nerved myself to meet Dicky's eyes with answering mockery.

"The Merry Widow," featuring that winsome, vivacious star of the silver-sheet, Mae Murray, is now playing at the Heilig theater. The picture comes to Salem highly recommended by those who have seen it in other cities.

"You know there's nothing you'd like better than to have a Micawberish finger in the pie," I said saucily, "and if you're especially good, I may permit you to dress the salad."

"Who is that?"

"Perhaps, if you crawl on your bended knees and hit your head three times on the floor, I may consider saving your salad course from destruction," he retorted loftily. "You know very well that a salad without my dressing is—"

"Like an egg without salt or a kiss without a mustache, I suppose." I grinned at him impudently and the next second I found myself caught into the circle of his arm while his hand bent back to my head.

"So you're hankering for 'muscled kisses,'" he glibed. "Well, I know I'm handicapped, but—I haven't shaved yet this morning, so I'll do the best I can."

He rubbed his face against mine and kissed me with a roughness utterly foreign to him. Then with a mischievous chuckle, he released me, and stepping back eyed me critically.

"Cave-man stuff seems to agree with you," he said with an admiring light in his eyes. "Gives you a charming color, and your eyes betray most captivantly that you don't know whether to laugh or decide to laugh."

He was so ridiculous that my annoyance, which he shrewdly had surmised, gave way to laughter. I could not help the remembrance however, that once he would not have mentioned Dr. Pettit's name with such careless light-heartedness, although I was relieved that his absurd jealousy of the stilted, pedantic physician had faded.

"Nothing so exciting," I returned, more important than to discuss more important than mustaches. What did the doctor say about your head?"

"That it will be all right in a day or two," he responded. Then as the upper hall door opened and we heard voices just outside, I saw him suddenly stiffen into attention.

"Who is that?" he asked. (To be continued.)
