MR. SHULL'S APPEAL

(Portland Journal.)

An appeal for development of a real American merchant marine was made by Frank Shull Tuesday before the American Institute of Banking, Portland. He said he did not believe that President Coolidge had ever been given all the facts regarding the needs of shipping in this country.

That the president acted without full information is the probable explanation of his theory of one-man control. It is incredible that Mr. Coolidge would want to break down American lines. Yet, one-man control was doing exactly that thing. The true explanation must be, as Mr. Shull suggests, that the president had never been given all the facts regarding the needs of shipping in this country.

Regional control of government shipping lines is the only safe control. America has a vast coast line. It has very complex interests. It has varied climates, which yield varied products. Cotton in the South, timber in the northwest, wheat in various sections, and tropical fruits in California, Arizona and Florida, make varied interests and varied peoples.

This conglomerate mess requires every viewpoint to be covered in the board of control. That is why we have regional representation in congress. There must be somebody to speak for the various sections, or some sections will suffer.

That is exactly what began to happen when one man was set up to run the shipping lines. Destruction began. The Portland line was threatened. The smaller ports were unrepresented and were programmed for annihilation. The number of ships in operation was cut to about one-fifth the former strength.

This was not building up the American merchant marine as decreed and intended by congress. It was a process of rapid pulling down of the American merchant marine and placing American shippers at the mercy of the big shipping monopolies and foreign shipowners. It was a rapid return to the old days when Theodore Roosevelt had to hire foreign ships to carry the fuel for the cruise of the American battleship fleet around the world.

There is no particular fault to find with the above from the Portland Journal of yesterday—

Excepting that it seems to presuppose that the present method of the government running ships is to be a permanent thing.

It will not be. It is not the right way. It will be a source of trouble and dissatisfaction as long as it lasts—

And a source of large expense to the federal treasury. There is no good reason for paying out great sums of money in this way. It would have some justification if there were no other way—

But there is another way; the right way; the way the fathers of our Republic did it; imposed a preferential duty in favor of goods carried by American ships, which built up a great American merchant marine, that carried 80 per cent of our imports and exports for the sixty-one years prior to 1850.

When these facts get over to the people of this country in the right way, they will demand that the fiasco of the federal fleet be stopped, and they will not listen to any other form of ship subsidy, either.

FREIGHT RATES

From the national Grange and from farmers everywhere there has been for some time bitter protest against present freight rates on farm products.

But as the "last straw" the Western railroads are still clamoring for a general increase of five percent in freight rates.

A brief filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by farm representatives gives figures showing that present average rates for all hauls of farm products is $4.50 a ton, while the average rate on all manufactured products is a little over $2 a ton. The brief cites that although only about half the total of farm products are moved by trains, agriculture pays six per cent of its entire income for freight charges, while on the other side, 90 percent of the products of industry are moved by rail, yet but a little more than two percent of its income is paid for freight. The Grange contends that the farmers are paying altogether too much of the nation's freight bill and that rates should be adjusted on an equal basis. The various state Granges take the same stand on the matter of taxation—that farm lands pay far too much taxes, and that they should only pay their just proportion, based on returns from the lands.

LUXURY LAND BOOMS

"Desire for luxurious living seems to be at the base of the land boom in this country. Florida, as a winter resort, started the fires burning. Pass Christian, on the Gulf coast of Mississippi, is the starting point of another somewhat similar boom. From the place forty miles of water resort country is being opened up and values there are multiplying—not at any such rate as in Florida, but pulling strong. The developers, Dow, Jones & Co., say they expect to make it a winter playground of the Southwest and Middlewest, on the basis of its less tropical climate and greater accessibility than Florida's resorts."

At this rate of developing real estate booms, scows and houseboats on the rivers and lakes will soon be the only sites for the homes of men of moderate means.

The rural magistrate told the young couple he would have to fine them for speeding. They admitted they were going at a pretty smart clip, but told him they had only $5, that they had come to be married and that was to be his fee. He considered this and then handed down his decision. "In that case I'll marry you and take the $5. The speeding case I'll continue for six months. If you can't pay the fine I'll give you a jail sentence. By that time you won't mind it."

CHAPTER F164

LILLIAN WANTED TO GO TO A HOTEL

Lillian rushed at me with characteristic impetuosity as Dicky ushered her into the room. Dicky had the smaller bags and behind him was the taxi driver, laden with suitcases. But Lillian carried several small parcels which I guessed she feared to intrust to the proverbial carelessness of masculine hands, and despite her apparent haste, she managed to deposit them safely upon the table before she swept me into her arms.

"Oh! it's good! good! to see you again," she ejaculated, embracing me warmly. "Let's have a look at you!" She held me off at arm's length, inspected me gravely. "How do you do, Madge? You're prettier every time I see you. And you have the color no rouge put on can paint."

"That's not natural color, dear heart, that's the flush of righteous anger mantling her fair cheek. I just smashed thirty or forty cents worth of glass and cold cream tubes, in the bedroom, trying to get out a collar from the gimcracks, and her repressed emotions are making her apoplectic."

"Lillian shot an inquiring significant glance at me. I was filled with mischief, and I prepared to play up to anything she might say. "I hope those antique things I picked up for you in the Italian quarter weren't among them," she said solicitously.

"I am afraid they were," I replied dolefully with an inward grin at the remembrance of the inexpensive, easily replaced, but oddly attractive little dishes to which she referred.

"Then I thank you for the high value you are pleased to place upon my gifts," Lillian threw this over her shoulder to Dicky, whose face had lengthened ludicrously.

"I thought so," he said. "I just happened to remember the team work which you two think so neat. But your Uncle Ephraim was just a little bit too quick on the draw for you, just a little bit too quick."

Lillian surveyed him coolly with hands set lightly at her sides. "The trouble with you, Dicky bird," she began, but what else she said I did not hear, for Marion's soft voice sounded close to me.

"Don't you think I've waited long enough for a hug, Auntie Madge?" I swept Lillian's adorable young daughter into my arms, and hugged her with enthusiasm.

"Why Didn't You Tell Me?" "I'll answer your first question before you ask it," I told her when I had released her. "Junior is all right. He had a bad attack of croup, while I was home, but he was better before I came back, and a telephone from the farm this morning told me he was quite himself again."

"Oh! I'm so glad—he's better, I mean," she amended with pretty childish confusion. "I can hardly wait until I see him. I've brought some things, too."

She indicated the packages she and her mother had carried with so much care, and was untying one of the strings when Lillian stopped her.

"Don't do that now, sweet-heart," she said, and then turned to me reprovingly. "What's this the Dicky bird's cheeping concerning the arrival of the Braithwaites in an hour? Why what on earth didn't you tell me? I had planned to go out to the farm in the morning, anyway, and we'll just call a taxi and vamoose over to a hotel for the night."

"They're in the waste basket in the kitchen," I said coldly, for the contrast between his indifference to the breakage when he thought I only was concerned and his present solicitude was enough to chill the tones of any wife's voice. I wonder if most married women have the experience of hearing courteous language spoken to everyone else except themselves. To do Dicky justice, however, he is the soul of courtesy to me when he is in a good humor. But I notice that no matter how angry he may be, he is able to control his temper if someone like Lillian, whose opinion he values, happens in.

Dicky started toward the door with the evident intention of searching for the pieces. But with a patent second thought, he whirled quickly, and caught the delighted smirk on Lillian's face, and its slower reflection on my own.

"I thought so," he said. "I just happened to remember the team work which you two think so neat. But your Uncle Ephraim was just a little bit too quick on the draw for you, just a little bit too quick."

Bits For Breakfast

It is a great pity— That there must be so much delay in such cases as that of Tom Murray; but most of the rules of law that are used for such delays were made to prevent possible miscarriages of justice.

So let us abide the issue with what patience we can.

It is likely that the bee men of Marion county will organize a week from today, at their meeting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon at the Salem Chamber of Commerce rooms. The members of the organization committee are all working, and so are some of the leading bee keepers of the county, who realize that the industry must be organized in order to have a certain great future.

We are told again by some more experts that our section can grow the finest fiber flax. We have known this for over 50 years, but it does not hurt to have the fact confirmed.

Moreover, this is the only section of the entire world where great quantities of the finest fiber flax can be grown almost within eyeshot of the factories to manufacture it, where all the conditions for both growing and manufacturing are found in perfection. The Belfast district, the greatest flax manufacturing center of the earth, produces only about 15 per cent of its fiber. The rest must be imported. The manufacturing conditions are poor, impossible in many good fiber producing districts.

Salem man tells of a Swedish friend of his who, in the pre-Volstead days, asked of a bar keeper if he had any squirrel whiskey. "No, but we have some good Old Crow whiskey," was the answer. Said the Swedish friend: "Well, I didn't want to fly; I yooost wanted to hop around a little."

"Dune!" returned the old lady in high indignation, for her patience had long been exhausted. "he's dune half an hour since but he'll no stop!"

A clergyman who was also a wit, once preached rather a long sermon from the text "Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting."

After his congregation had listened for about an hour, some began to get weary and went out. Others soon followed, greatly to the annoyance of the minister.

Another person started, whereupon the person stopped in his sermon and said: "That's right, gentlemen; as fast as you are weighed pass out." And the others waited until the sermon was ended.

The professor had asked time and again for the students to put more personal touch in their themes, so one of the papers which he received ended thus: "Well, professor, how are the wife and kiddies; and, by the way, before I forget it, could you lend me five dollars?"

Lilly May came to her mistress. "Ah, would like a waak's vacation, Miss Annie," she said, in her soft negro accent; "As wants to be married."

Lillie had been a good girl, so her mistress gave her the week's vacation, a white dress, a veil and a plum-cake.

Promptly at the end of the wee Lillie returned, radiant. "Oh Miss Annie!" she exclaimed. "Ah was the mos' lovely bride! Me dress was perfec', ma vell mo' lovely, the cake mos' good! Ah oh, the dancin' and the eatin'!"

"Well, Lillie, this sounds delightful," said her mistress, "but you have left out the point of your story—I hope you have a good husband."

Lillie's tone changed to indignation: "Now, Miss Aggie, what yo' think? Tha' darn nigger neber turn up!"
