PHILCO "A" and "B" Storage Batteries give the radio owner the maximum of satisfaction as well as longer and more economical service.

PHILCO has in past years, through their research department, developed Radio "A" and "B" batteries that give the Radio Fan the best possible radio reception at a small cost.

PHILCO is now able to supply Radio Fans with Radio "A" and "B" batteries at a low cost not before realized. While the initial cost on storage "A" and "B" batteries is a little greater than on dry cell batteries, over a certain period an economical saving will be realized in the upkeep of operating a Radio Set. Any PHILCO dealer will be pleased to demonstrate PHILCO Radio "A" and "B" batteries at any time.

their original life. How It Is Done

The radio tube becomes weak and inefficient as its filaments becomes contaminated with certain gases which are contained in the tube. These gases fill the microscopic pores of the filament and prevent proper action of the tube by not allowing the exchange of ions between filament and grid. It is obvious then that if these gases can be driven off, the proper tube action can be restored. The seemingly difficult task can be performedin less than eleven minutes with the proper equipment. The thorium, which is used in approximately 90 per cent of all tubes, serves the purpose of making these tubes able to withstand a considerable range of filament voltage, thus making them splendid subjects for radio tube rejuvenation.

Some have stated that it is the exhaustion of the thorium which determines the life of the tube. This can scarcely be true in view of the fact that many tubes which do not have thoriated filaments may be rejuvenated providing they can be kept from burning out. By the use of a simple and inexpensive electrical device, the Jefferson Tube Rejuvenator, it is found that by burning the filament for a very short time at a relatively high temperature, followed by a lower temperature for a longer period, the filament discharges gases which have filled its pores and is then ready to continue to function as a tube should -thus, the amplifying ability or power of a seemingly exhausted tube is restored to its original strength
