

ROBIN REED SOLVES CARVER'S MYSTERY "MUSCLE MANGLE", WINS TWO FALLS

ASTORIAN'S TRICK KNOWN IN ORIENT

Fast Work Marks Preliminaries and Finals Before Sport Followers

A fast 52 minutes of superior wrestling terminating in victory for Robin Reed in two clean cut falls last night kept local fans pitched to keen interest. Roy Carver, a professional welterweight of several years repute, won many admirers in this exhibition despite his defeat at the hands of a better man.

Reed at all times displayed a superior aggressiveness that told on his opponent although he has been less than a year on the pro end of the game.

With but a fair crowd in attendance at the Armory, favoritism for the two men was evenly divided, the fans showing keen delight in the pushing in fits and starts of the "muscle mangle" used by Carver and in the lightning-like releases effected by Reed in escaping from nearly a score of toe holds and muscle grinds secured by his opponent.

The bout by stated intervals follows: Ten minutes: Opening with only a brief feint for holds Carver repeatedly slid out of Reed's tentative body grapples, securing toe holds in the period. By his ability to work for toe-holds, Carver caused a bit of uneasiness in the Reed camp but each time the holder of the western welterweight belt broke away usually by tossing Carver against the ropes.

Twenty-five minutes: As Reed tightened his offensive, Carver evaded many sharp body holds by revealing his mysterious muscle mangle. This hold is a most excruciating muscle prod that soon caused Reed to limp painfully. Finishing head scissors and hammerlocks secured by Reed were quickly broken by Carver through the use of this Oriental trick.

Thirty minutes: Just before the time was sounded for this first period Reed came into action with a dash and after escaping several toe holds broke through Carver's defense for a reversed full Nelson of the legs paralyzing him and bring him to his back just before time.

Forty minutes: Here the fans were brought to their feet when Carver secured a wrist lock combined with his jitsu punishment of Reed's neck. Dazed and not far from unconsciousness Reed countered with a head lock and managed to break away.

Final: At the end of 22 minutes and 21 seconds Reed secured his second fall with a half body scissors and an arm lock. Just prior to this he had maneuvered Carver into a very painful straight arm twist from which the Astorian man escaped narrowly.

The entire match was marked by clean and sportsmanlike work of both men. Carver, former holder of a welterweight title in Canada, still shows the effect of a mishap that has kept him out of the game for a year. While retaining his health Carver has spent much time in the Orient. His Japanese holds, were taught him by the famous Norwegian wrestler, Kobe Charlie, of Kobe Japan.

The Oriental holds of Carver was Reed's first experience with this phase of wrestling and caused him a bit of worry before he managed to evade them.

L. C. Eastman of Silverton, refereed the event, which was promoted by Matchmaker Harry Plant of the Salem sports commission.

In the preliminary Tiny Simmons, 142-pound wrestler, coach of the Philomath Athletic club took two falls from Chuck Taylor of Astoria. Plenty of speed was in evidence when the two tangled with the first fall coming in 6 minutes and 50 seconds by a long arm scissors. He met the second fall with the same hold.

Promoter Mathew of Albany, who was present at the match stated that negotiations were underway for a return match between Reed and Jones on New Year's day. The two wrestlers to draw last Friday and Jones was unable to regain his title-belt to the Western Intermountain welterweight championship. If Reed agrees to meet Jones at that time the match will be arranged, according to the promoter.
