

New Year's Greeting

from Salem's Mayor

THE year just past has been a very successful one for Salem; it has been a year of real progress. There has never been a year in the history of Salem when so many homes have been erected as during the year just past, and the indications are that many more will be erected during the present year. Several miles of pavement have been added, so that we now have nearly 60 miles of paved streets within the corporate limits of our city. It is scarcely necessary to suggest that this adds greatly to the cleanliness of our city as well as giving it an atmosphere of added permanence. Surrounded by a rich agricultural and horticultural district and having also many permanent and highly productive manufacturing industries, Salem possesses a rare combination of economic and industrial factors which insure her continued growth and prosperity. The city has made some great advances in her industrial development in the past year; notable among them being her first and second linen mills; the first one in full operation and the machinery for the second one ordered. Prospects for rapid industrial growth here were never before so bright. Our schools are second to none; from the elementary schools to the university our educational facilities are unequalled. Our Chamber of Commerce is functioning to the highest degree of efficiency, as are also the various civic organizations which contribute so substantially to the progress of our city. I wish space would permit the individual mention of each one of these organizations and the enumeration of the wholesome and beneficial influences which they are constantly exerting throughout our entire city. They have exhibited a splendid spirit of helpfulness during the past year toward the needy and afflicted ones of our community which truly exemplifies the Golden Rule.

We should each and every one of us feel a sense of individual responsibility for the substantial upbuilding and the well balanced prosperity of our city.

JOHN B. GIESY, Mayor of Salem
