GLORIA SWANSON IS STARRING IN PICTURE

"Stage Struck," Famous Success, Is Now Showing at Oregon Theatre

Trouble has no monopoly on confusion. Good things often come in bunches, like the splendid programs the Oregon theatre has been serving to its patrons. With the final curtain rung down on Raymond Griffith in "He's a Prince" last night, Manager Stille announces Gloria Swanson in "Stage Struck" as the feature for the week-end, opening this afternoon.

The appearance of Gloria alone in a play written especially for her, and designed to give full play to her talents, would be sufficient to call out the standing room only placard. But, in addition, "Stage Struck" assumes the proportions of a moving picture spectacle. It is done in natural colors with every attention paid to setting that bring out in full the possibilities of this sort of photography.

Centering around the theatrical ambition of Jennie Hagen, played by Miss Swanson, and her battle up the ladder of success from a waitress in a "hash house" to proprietorship of her own "lunch wagon," the story is one that gives Gloria full opportunity to display the dramatic abilities that have endeared her to the film public. A comedy bit presenting her as the masked marvel in a women's boxing match is a highlight that has to be seen to be fully appreciated.

Ford Sterling, Lawrence Gray and Gertrude Astor are some of the names appearing in the cast.

PICTURE COMING TO HEILIG STARS CODY

"Exchange of Wives," With Low Cody and Eleanor Boardman, Sunday

Eleanor Boardman is again appearing in a picture directed by Hobart Henley, the man who has probably done more toward bringing to light the ability of this talented young actress than any other director. It is "Exchange of Wives," coming to the Heilig theatre Sunday and playing over Monday and Tuesday. Low Cody and Eleanor Boardman are co-starring.

Under Henley's direction, Miss Boardman made "The Turnout," "Sinners in Silk," and "So This is Marriage."

In "So This is Marriage" she played the young wife who could not settle down to being just that. Henley brought out unsuspected shades of feeling and perfect control of her expression. This Miss Boardman attributes to the confidence with which he inspires his actors and actresses.

"Under the direction of Mr. Henley, I never feel the least bit nervous or self-conscious when in front of the camera," Miss Boardman says. "I feel that he has confidence in my ability, and that if I don't get what he wants the first time, he will simply do the scene until the proper result is obtained, no matter how long we have to wait. He never loses his temper."

So when the opportunity came to play in "Exchange of Wives" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, Eleanor was glad to take it. The part offered greater possibilities for comedy than any she had heretofore characterized and she proved herself an excellent trouper at this type of part.

The other featured members of the cast are Low Cody, Renee Adoree and Creighton Hale.

FAST INDIAN PONY MARKED FOR GLUE

Thousands of Horses Sold During Year, Shows End of Plain Life

GLACIER PARK, Mont., Jan. 15.—A striking example of the fact that the American Indian no longer measures his wealth in ponies is contained in the announcement by the United States Indian department that the tribes of Montana this year sold for slaughter several thousand small horses on the various reservations in this state.

These animals, so highly prized upon the prairie in the early days, now are worthless except for glue making. Ponies weighing more than 800 pounds bring $5. For those weighing less than 800 the Indians only get $2.50 apiece.

The Indians could not give them away alive on the open market because no one has any use for them. However, since the glue factories began bidding for these puny steeds the red men, with permission of their reservation superintendents, have rounded up all the wandering herds of wild ponies they could find and grazing the foothill region of the Rocky mountains.

Even the Indian himself has found little use for many ponies in recent years. The cow is a more useful animal to him. On the Glacier National park reservation where these wild ponies have become plentiful since the World war, the Blackfoot Indians have rounded up more than 2,000 for the glue pot. From among the lot the Blackfeet selected a number of wonderful pinto ponies, descendants of the much-cherished type which their forefathers rode. These they will keep for their own use.

These Indians have made unusual progress in agriculture under Superintendent Campbell's five-year educational program. They discovered the grass of their reservation is much more valuable to them eaten by milch cows than when it is consumed by bands of roving cayuses, for which they could find no practical use.

These Blackfoot Indians also have been raising enough wheat to keep in operation two gristmills which the United States government built as an inducement for them to farm. They even are exhibitors in competition with the white farmer at the Montana state fairs.

STRINGLESS BEANS AND GRAVY

Stringless beans are usually served with cream or butter sauce. Often there are some left over. Often, also, there will be a little gravy left over. Save both and heat them together. They are a delicious combination.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES GOOD

The Salem Hospital Is Now Receiving Applications for a New Class

One of the functions of a standardized hospital is to conduct a training school for nurses. The hospital owes this to its community; otherwise, where are the nurses to be found who are in constant demand in care for the sick in our homes unless the ranks are being regularly filled by new graduates.

The Salem hospital, since its organization has graduated many capable nurses. It is now very much better equipped for handling its training school, due to the enlarged and more comfortable nurses' quarters, adequate class rooms, etc., giving much better facilities than ever before were available. The demand for competent nurses has never been fully supplied. Employment always awaits her wherever she goes, and her compensation is better than that offered in most occupations open to young women. Furthermore, she has the consciousness of rendering a most important service. There is no more worthy calling than to be fully equipped to skillfully cooperate with the best physicians and surgeons in caring for the sick. Her services are vital to the success of any hospital. She is the "third eye" of the doctor, having the patient under constant observation during his absence. The most excellent work of any doctor may be made of no avail if the after-care by the nurse fails.

The Salem hospital is now receiving applications for a new class. The course offered is pronounced unexcelled by any other in Oregon. The state board requires that the applicant shall have had a high school course or its equivalent as a foundation for the three years' work. At the end of her course she graduates and with her diploma and emblem from a "Grade AA" standardized hospital she has a passport into the homes of the best people wherever her services may be required.

The Salem hospital considers this a very essential part of the service which it is rendering to the community.

DEATH TOLL IS 112 FOR TWO DISASTERS

Catholic cemetery and three more in private burying grounds. Some of the bodies are being sent to other towns for burial tomorrow, a few funerals have already taken place, but most of them will be tomorrow. Because of the inability of local ministers to meet the demands of separate services, plans for a joint service for several of the victims were discussed. Jimmie Connel, owner of the mine, said today that he would do everything possible to prevent suffering among the dependents of the dead miners pending returns from relief movements started.

Portland—Pacific Power & Light company, Portland Gas & Coke and Northwestern Electric company affiliated corporations, show 1925 balance of $2,297,348.49, or $51,976.19 more than in 1924.

Eleanor Boardman and Low Cody are to be featured in "Exchange of Wives," to be shown at the Heilig theatre, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. It is the first Low Cody picture to be shown in Salem for some time.

NOW AT THE OREGON

Gloria Swanson and Ford Sterling are starred in the Paramount production, "Stage Struck," now playing at the Oregon theatre. The picture was produced by Allan Dwan.
