Prohibition Criticism Answered By Dr. Tully

"Remedy for Defects of Prohibition Is More Prohibition," Declares Pastor in Article Headed "Steady, Citizens, Steady."
(By Dr. Norman K. Tully)

Money is being used; meetings are being held; adroit propaganda is being spread, in the name of personal liberty and righteousness, to weaken the Volstead Act, which is the right arm of prohibition, and raise the alcoholic content of permitted beverages.
Misrepresentations are current about the criminal condition of the Union. The remedy is being sought in the camouflage of "Light Wines and Beer."

It is not mentioned that we have light beer now; a man may drink a hoghead if he will keep the alcoholic content below one half of one per cent. Besides, the wets themselves in the old days set the intoxicating mark as over one half of one per cent alcohol.
So the plea for 2.75 per cent beer is simply a request for permission to get drunk. It is not a harmless drink, with a pleasant tinkle in it, that the agitators want, but alcohol, as much as possible, and by all means enough to make them drunk. Because the Volstead Act limits the amount to a measure below the intoxicating level, they call it a blight and a curse, cultivate throat disease, and raise like strong drink and foam like a mug of beer for a change.

The fact of the poisonous nature of alcohol in any quantity is overlooked. Alcohol is a toxin, a product of fermentation, which is a process of decay. Alcohol in its nature was never intended to be consumed in any manner as a beverage. So used, it is a thing against nature, and deadly disposed towards the tissues of the body.
Nothing is said about the expense of the alcoholic habit. The Amendment and Volsteadism have relieved us from a burden of unlawful destructive indulgence which was costing our nation three times as much as we paid for our schools, and five times as much as for the worship of Jehovah. In this age of efficiency why return to that puking expense?

They want us to forget, too, that the alcoholic habit is dangerous under all circumstances. There never was a man strong enough to take the stuff or let it alone as he wished. Drunkards graves are always filled from the ranks of the moderate drinkers. There is no other source.
The "light wines and beer" dupes are clamoring to be allowed to furnish recruits. The old staggering ranks are becoming thinned; the new zealots would fill them again.

There is no such thing as light wines. Wines run as high as 16 per cent alcohol. Wine intoxicates. Noah's shame was induced by drunkenness by wine. In Homer's day wine made men drunk. Daniel proved the supremacy of water over wine that was making his fellows in the civil service drunk. Alexander the Great died a drunken debauch brought on by wine. The novelist, Ibanex has deplored the novelist drunkenness among the young men of modern Spain. What do the young men drink? Wine. It is the same stuff for which the decriers of Volsteadism are agitating.

Crime is rampant, but facts are not behind the anti-drys when they shout that "prohibition is filling our penitentiaries." There are more liquor-raiders in our prisons than liquor-law violators. There are nearly as many white-slavers. Only 11 per cent of our prisoners in federal institutions are liquor law violators. From 37 per cent to 43 per cent as the years run are for Anti-narcotic law violations. It has been demonstrated that prohibition is not increasing the use of narcotics.

It is asserted in wet meetings that "there are no bootleggers in Canada," and that all we need for a moral cleanup is a similar system of licensed prescription sale of liquor by the government.
But that would not make alcohol a good thing to drink. Neither would it eradicate drunkenness, for Canada has drunkards. Neither would it abolish the bootlegger, for Canada has bootleggers. In the Oregonian of Portland morning of February 14, 1926, appeared this headline, "Canada Shaken by Bootleg Scandal."

The article related how "department officials were involved in the plot," that a keen parliamentary struggle was on to hush the matter up, but that a legislative investigation was the more probable. A whole cargo of liquor coming up the St. Lawrence was involved. How, then, would the plan of our wets improve our present conditions when their Canadian model is on a lower level than we now stand?

We are told that Prohibition was sprung on the country suddenly, and that the citizens had no time to deliberate. On the contrary it was the result of a half a century of moral persuasion, followed by another half a century of increasing agitation. The W. C. T. U., the Prohibition party and the Anti-Saloon league were all actively engaged in producing and crystallizing dry sentiment. The liquor traffic had ample time to stand from under; Prohibition was the culmination of a century of study of the nature of alcohol as a drink.

They tell us, too, that the Amendment was adopted while the soldiers were in France, as if it were slipped over on the country while its defenders were away. Why don't they tell us that the congress that submitted the Amendment was elected by the help of the soldiers before they left, and that the state legislatures that ratified also had been elected by the votes of the soldiers, so that Prohibition is their act as well as ours? Why misrepresent the soldiers? They are good citizens. They helped make the country dry as well as "safe for democracy."

The victory was not a partisan victory. In submitting the Amendment the senate voted republicans 5 more than 3 to 1, and the democrats exactly 3 to 1. The house voted republicans over 3 to 1, and the democrats slightly higher. This non-partisan Amendment was placed before the nation for ratification 23 of whose 48 states were already dry by their own will, some of them, like Oregon, by constitutional enactment.

Never was the nation so united on any measure as in the adoption of prohibition. We had only 7 years in which to ratify, but as great was the unanimity that the process was complete in 113 months. The drys had to get both houses in 36 states, or 72 houses. The wets had to keep only 13 houses in as many states. When the nation had spoken the drys had 45 states (9 more than necessary) and 91 houses (19 more than necessary), and the wets retained only three states (10 less than necessary) and 5 houses (8 less than necessary).

Never was there such a complete expression of national will; never one so non-partisan; never such a colossal experiment in a new social life. In all decency it should be given a fair trial. The time has been too short to test the new policy. Too many old soaks are still alive. We still are stupefied by the old booze atmosphere.
But a generation is rising that does not know the open saloon. Rum is still a demon, but outlawed instead of legalized. The country is a better place in which to raise a family than ever before. Let all good citizens take heart and hold on; the remedy for the defects of Prohibition is more prohibition.
