"A. go to the devil, ha! You can be a hateful little beast when you want to."

"There, now, children!" Mrs. Ingate exclaimed. "She was silent a moment, then: 'Well, if you can't John, you can't,' she sighed."

"I know," she said, "I hope you understand, mother. We're not broke, and the business is sound, but we just haven't got any money to spare right now, that's all."

"I believe I asked you to, I wish brother answered calmly. I wish you would attend to it before the list of the invited is published in the paper. I'm sorry you have delayed so long."

"I thought I had made myself clear."

"But we can't!" "Why not?" "She's a stenographer—your stenographer. Her father's a mechanic or something. It wouldn't do."

"Well, grandfather Ingate was a whisky dealer, and grandfather Limbrook peddled tin ware, and—"

"He did not! That was one of your father's jokes. My father's father was proprietor of a large store. He—"

"Her daughter was also talking. 'Really, John, I wish you wouldn't be so obstinate. Besides people might misunderstand. Let me tell you something, Josephine. I'm thinking of asking her to be my wife.'"

"Both women opened their mouths aghast. Mrs. Ingate exclaimed: 'John!' Josephine recovered to say, remonstratively: 'You're crazy.'"

"I am thirty years old, and entirely capable of selecting a wife for myself. I—"

"Come in, Miss MacLurie."

When, as she opened the door of the office, Eve MacLurie got the merest glimpse of the faces of Mrs. Ingate and Josephine, she declared Judge Harry Belt of the Oregon supreme court, who addressed Salem Rotarians. He explained his declaration by citing cases of mob rule in the south and showing that the murders in certain cities themselves are more numerous than are the murders in entire nations.

The Statesman issued its annual silo slogan number. Hiking clothes, or "rough clothes" must not be worn on Sunday from now on by girls residing at Lausanne Hall, girls' dormitory at Willamette university, according to announcement of more stringent enforcement of rules covering conduct of coeds.

Bridges were to be the principal topic of discussion when the city zoning and planning commission meets Saturday evening. C. B. McCullough, state bridge engineer, and member of the commission, has plans for a bridge on South Liberty street that will open up Liberty from the north limit to the south limit of the city.

As impressive proof of Salem's growth, comes the announcement of John Williamson, proprietor of the Lone Star service station, that he will build a $25,000 theatre in the vicinity of his service station in north Salem.

More than 400 girls at the senior high school have started to take the efficiency tests in physical education being given by Grace Snook, director of physical education in the Salem public schools. Four main points to be tested are posture, weight in relation to height and age, chest flexibility and grip.

Dr. W. H. Lytel, state veterinarian, accompanied by Albert Richard Wetjen, Robert Ormond Case of Portland, and Frank Richardson Pierce of Seattle, all professional writers, left here Friday for eastern and central Oregon where they will gather material for short stories which they expect to write for magazines. The party will visit a number of the largest interior ranches, including that of William Hanley, near Burns.
