Such a vision of loveliness! He paused at the door breathless.

Weakness seized his legs as remorse took his heart.

The bride-to-be was still smiling, but without spontaneity.

The pastor appeared. John took him out to the altar to discuss the arrangements.

The Rev. Mr. Walker wondered if it was five or ten dollars.

"Er—no, I'm not the bridegroom."

"Oh!" The pastor coughed and smiled.

A few minutes later the great organ rumbled the beginning of the infallible "Wedding March."

Clay having just had his first glimpse of Eve and been transfixed by her loveliness.

Clay opened the door to him. He was dressed, and it was apparent in the tilt of his cravat.

"Well, old man," the visitor spoke up gaily.

"Are you ready for the firing squad?"

"No... I just told her good bye."

EVE'S TWO LOVERS

EDGAR POE NORRIS

Left at the church, left at the church. The wheels of John Ingate's auto made a song of this as they sped up Washington street.

Clay turned over his only frock coat to Clay, he had had to go downtown and rent another.

Clay opened the door to him. He was dressed, and it was apparent in the tilt of his cravat.

"Well, old man," the visitor spoke up gaily.

"Are you ready for the firing squad?"

"No... I just told her good bye."

"The trip to the church was made in silence.

Almost at the moment of their arrival before the edifice, there burst upon it one of John Ingate's surprises.

The newcomers caught a glimpse of Clay and his companion as they stepped from the car.

The object of all this attention, extremely uncomfortable, kept his face rigidly in front of him.

John Ingate enjoyed the banter. His enjoyment was not lessened by his realization that the playful guests were making Clay uncomfortable.

While his charge remained in the sexton's office at the rear of the church, John went in search of Josephine and the bride.

AMOUNT OF LIME IN

The FARMER BOY SAYS

Growing children need the lime that good milk contains.

Milk is more than a delicious beverage—it's a real food. It contains not only plenty of lime, but also plenty of phosphate of lime which children need for growing bones.

Let it be plenty of Fairmount's milk and cream. Drink more milk.
