THERE IS LIKELY TO BE AN OVER PRODUCTION OF ASPARAGUS HERE

The Growers Must Pay More Attention to Quality, in Exploiting New Markets With the Product of This District—There is a Dangerous Disease That Attacks the Roots. With So Far No Sure Control

Editor Statesman:

It seems that the big question facing the asparagus grower of the future are not ones of cultural but possibly of pest control and marketing. Beetles are becoming more numerous throughout the state every year. Symphilids are now attacking the roots of some plantings, practically ruining the patch in one season. The former may be controlled by an insecticide, but at the present time there seems to be no sure control for the latter.

Another problem that the future a market for his product.
