HUSBAND DID THE WASHING

His Wife Confined to Her Bed by Ill Health

Because of his wife's frequent ill health, Mr. J. F. Gage was obliged to do the washing and cooking for the family. One day when Mrs. Gage was confined to her bed, he brought her the newspaper to read. Among the advertisements she noticed a letter from another sick woman telling of the help she had received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I'll try it," she decided. Her husband brought home a bottle and only a few days after she had begun to take it she felt well enough to be up around the house. Gradually her general health improved until she is now able to do her own work. In a letter which Mrs. Gage recently wrote, she said, "I have taken twelve bottles and feel like a new woman." She has told many women about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and one of her friends is now taking it. Her address is Mrs. J. F. Gage, Route 5, Brownwood, Texas. Ask your neighbor.

GREAT LABOR STRIKE IS BROUGHT TO END

quickly to every corner of the country. It was received through England with mixed feelings, characteristic of the British but mostly with cheers. Even then, however, the public did not give way to the delirium of the moment, but accepted with smiles and light hearts the fact that things soon would begin to return to normal.

It is the widespread opinion and hope of the country that the terms of Sir Herbert Samuel's memorandum submitted to the trades union congress in the early hours of the morning and the coal commission's report would form the foundation for a final and lasting settlement.

In Premier Baldwin's words, the ending of the general strike represents a "victory of common sense" and each side feels that it has saved its face. Probably the greatest laurels go to the British public, who refused to be seated or stampeded, took what came with calm and fortitude.

The government emergency service remained in full force tonight but there is every assurance, should order continue that they will be withdrawn at the earliest moment.

The British Gazette, the government's official newspaper, published its last issue tonight and instructions have been given to the different government departments to be ready to disband the forces of voluntary workers gathered in the stress and strain of the last week's developments at a moment's notice.

At Hull and one or two other provincial towns the strikers declared they would not return until military control was removed and in some other instances groups wanted assurance that all who had walked out would be reinstated in their employment.

The government, however, announced that it had no power to compel employers to take back every man who had been on strike, nor had it entered into any obligation to do so. This was one of the requests made by J. H. Thomas at the noon conference with Premier Baldwin—that the premier would use his good offices to bring about the reinstatement of the men and to ask employers to make the position as easy and smooth as possible. The government announcement points out that some displacements are inevitable, in view of the reductions in business consequent upon the strike and also through obligations of employers toward volunteers who helped them carry on.

It is understood that the premier planned to call both the miners and operators into conference tomorrow after the government is assured that the general strike is really and in good faith ended. The cabinet at its meeting tomorrow at which the general lines of the government's policy will be laid down, will first of all take up Sir Herbert Samuel's memorandum, which thus far, being only a private document has not officially been called to the government's attention.

The prime minister, in a message to the nation broadcast tonight, appealed to the country to forget the past quarrels and refrain from recriminations. He begged the employers to be generous and urged the workers and the whole nation to cooperate in restoring the country's industrial warfare.

British Strikers Wait for Overtures; Police Quell Trouble
