Plan No. 442

Economy and Comfort in Four Rooms

This attractive four-room shingled cottage may be built at moderate cost and will afford the maximum of comfort to the small family. The exterior is attractive and its beauty may be greatly enhanced by a few simple plantings of shrubbery and flowering plants.

The living room is of ample size and may, if occasion requires, be used as a dining room. For ordinary use the small breakfast table in the kitchen will answer the purpose quite as well.

Two good sized chambers connected by a small hallway complete the layout. The bathroom is favorably situated. Both bedrooms have cross ventilation and each has appropriate closet space.

BASEMENT POURED ON BLIGH THEATRE

Beams to Support the Store Part of Building Already in Place

Most of the concrete walls of the basement to Frank Bligh's new $250,000 theatre store and office building have been poured. It is probable that this work will be finished by the end of this week or early next week.

The contractors are doing all in their power to have the building ready for occupancy at as early a date as possible. Beams to support the first floor of the store part of the building are already being put in place, although the forms have not yet been removed from the concrete walls supporting the beams.

The auto service building Bligh is building on Ferry and State streets is progressing rapidly. It is the hope of the proprietors to be in the building by the middle of June. A room for the battery department has been partitioned off with hollow brick tile. The frame work for other parts of the building are rapidly rising.

TWENTY MILLIONS ASKED FOR SCIENCE

Committee Headed by Herbert Hoover Would Endow Pure Research

WASHINGTON. — (Associated Press). — A committee of eminent statesmen and scientists believes pure science is on the skids and that twenty million dollars are needed to endow its cause for the future.

This committee, headed by Herbert Hoover, announces a three-million dollar start in what it calls the collection of industry's huge debt to science. The industrial structure of the world today has emerged from the pure science laboratories of yesterday, these men say, and the supreme question for generations to come is how the progress of research in pure science can best be stimulated.

A national research endowment of $20,000,000, yielding an annual income of $2,000,000 directed by the national academy of sciences, is the means proposed. The committee plans to establish fellowships for research at various American universities, which would supplement the Carnegie, Rockefeller and other foundations in making opportunities for pure scientific study sufficiently attractive to compete with the high salaries and excellent equipment offered in applied science laboratories of the American industries.

Leaders in industry have been approached with such arguments as this, voiced by Dr. Robert Millikan of the Norman Bridge laboratories: "Galileo's discovery that force is measured by the product of mass by acceleration made the construction of the modern dynamic engines possible, but we stress the value of the method rather than the result."

"It was two centuries before it found any particular application at all, but during that period it reshaped philosophy and reshaped religion, for through it mankind began to know a God not of caprice and whim, but a God who works through law."

"Through it we have learned to read the story of the geological evolution of the earth, of the evolution of life on the earth, of human history and civilization, of the stars themselves and even of the elements of which the stars are made."

disappearance as a baby resulted in a world-wide search, which was first instituted by the child's parents at a cost of practically an entire fortune, and later carried on by close relatives.

Though fire has destroyed the only two tintypes taken of himself when a baby, Dellinger expects to have in his possession within a few days a picture of the old Ross home in Washington Lane, Germantown, which is being sent by a former neighbor of his living in Georgia.

The picture, the birthmarks and the fact that Dellinger bears the Ross family characteristics as to small hands and feet and very slender ears, will be counted strong evidence in addition to other substantial proof which he will have to offer when he goes to confer with the Ross family in Philadelphia at their invitation.

THIS FRIENDSHIP STORY DECLARED TO BE TRUE

he should to uphold the law of his country."

Sam scratched his head. "Well! Maybe! I don't know!" said he. "Guess you're right, sheriff! I have no call to feel hard against Bill. He and I have been friends too long. He's a good fellow, is Bill, kind-hearted, good-natured and terrible fond of dogs. Yes, sir, that man just dotes on dogs—has any number of them. By the way, every dog must have his license, mustn't he? That's the law, isn't it? I wonder! Come to think about it, I don't believe poor Bill has a license for 'nary one of his hounds!"

It was the sheriff's busy night. With a twinkle in his eye and a second five dollar bill in his pocket, off he set about the furtherance of his duty. True, he found that dogs Bill had in plenty, but, as Sam had feared, not a license among them! And as was fitting, in the name of the law upon Bill was levied a tax of thirty pieces of silver.

It is not an unmixt blessing to have one's hours and deeds and thoughts an open book for all who run to read; not altogether a misfortune to come and go and live and breathe and have one's being unnoticed and unrecited by too friendly neighbors.

So the doctor said, "Well, Fido, you'll just have to help me now. Come here and show this boy how a little boy like him with a broken leg that is all well ought to walk."

So the doctor bandaged up one of Fido's legs and told her to walk like a boy with a lame leg should walk. She started off around the room. The boy laughed at her antics, and before he realized it he was going after her and imitating her steps.

So the people gave her the name Miss Fido Syke, M.D. And that seemed to be a pretty good name for her, she helped so many people.
