ARMS CONFERENCE WILL OPEN TODAY

(Continued from page 1.) fear in France and among the French allies that in any new European conflict Germany's big population might conceivably throw its weight with the even bigger population of Russia, and has augmented their conviction that some more effective form of European security than that pro-vided for by Locarno must come into being before the western European powers can think of inaugurating any considerable diminution in their defense forces.

In other words France is still apprehensive of her future security and seeks to have worked out some fabric of mutual assistance which can operate automatically under the league and which would render it impossible for any country to muster fighting units of a greater combined strength than the mutually assisting powers.

The commission itself has a broad program of study before it. which may, however, regard as all-embracing and obscure, extending as it does to such questions as: *Can reductions in armaments be promoted by examining possible means for insuring that the mutual assistance, economic and military, contemplate by article 16 of the covenant, shall be brought quickly into operation as soon as an act of aggression has been committed?" It is believed that the American delegation comes to Geneva absolutely open minded and Secretary of State Kellogg has said. with the realization that while situation with respect to security, other countries are faced with different problems. France, Italy and Japan, having taken a position against a separate naval conference, there is much speculation as to the probable policy of the United States on this question. The American delegates have declined to discuss this matter.
