Application Is Denied

The public service commission has denied the application of Washington county for rehearing of modification of an order previously issued in connection with the establishment of an under-grade crossing under the tracks of the Southern Pacific company. In another order the commission granted an application of the Marion county court for a grade crossing over the tracks of the Southern Pacific company near Silverton. A petition asking for investigation of a hazardous grade crossing near Monroe was dismissed by the commission. The commission denied a petition of Harvey Cross, county judge of Clackamas county, for a signal bell where the Willamette Valley Southern railroad crosses Maple Lane. In dismissing the application the commission ordered the railroad corporation to remove a certain embankment, which obscured the view of motorists.

TOURIST CAMP HIT AT CLUB LUNCHEON

Irving Vining Says Travelers Are Warned Not to Visit Salem.

Conditions at the Salem Municipal auto camp were rapped by Irving E. Vining, president of the Oregon state chamber of commerce who addressed members of the Salem chamber of commerce at their noon luncheon Monday noon. He declared that all up and down the line on the Pacific highway tourists are passing the word to other tourists to "steer clear of Salem" as far as stopping at the auto camp is concerned.

At Medford, Eugene, Roseburg and Corvallis, he said, courteous treatment awaits the tourists and in addition there are first class accommodations. Instead of the canvas top "dog tents" of the Salem camp, modern log cabins or other wooden structures are provided. Also the community houses in other camps are modern and not displeasing to the eye.

Another reason why Salem is not a mecca for tourists, he said, is that the city has no outstanding hotel. Traveling salesmen would rather journey on to Independence or to Albany, or to Corvallis where they can receive first class accommodations and at the same time find food that is palatable.

It is detrimental to any city of Salem's size, he said, when the leading hotel man through necessity, rents patrons baths with their rooms. He also dwelt on the fact that in the leading hotels here Oregon food is not given a place of prominence.

He said that recently he had occasion to stop at a local hotel. He entered the hotel's restaurant for breakfast. He asked for some Oregon berries and was told none were to be had. Upon further questioning, he said he found that he could only get grape fruit or oranges—in other words, he put it, the restaurant was advertising California and Florida, but not Oregon.

Mr. Vining also warned against over-advertising. He declared that a town that advertises and can't make good every part of the advertising, will soon suffer. Already the west indulged in so much bragadoocio, he said, that easterners discount all Oregon and California advertising fifty percent to start with, and discount western speakers 75 percent.

Bits For Breakfast

Willamette university's commencement—

It has been one of the most brilliant and fruitful in the history of the institution.

The loyalty movement of the alumni, for instance, will grow into one of the biggest things ever started to keep Willamette growing and going in the right way.

The alumni banquet last night was one of the finest ever held, in every way. Not the least feature in deserving was the repast and the serving of it. That was under the direction of Mrs. Henry Vandevort of Salem.

Six hundred thousands cans of fruit packed by the eight Salem canneries in one day. That is going some. It will pass the million mark one of these fine days, and the two million mark, and on up.

Four artists of international reputation are to be heard in Salem the coming winter months. If the people of Salem show enough interest, this will put Salem in a class with New York, Boston, Washington, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, and other first class cities where these same artists appear.

Without the holding and setting of the new Elinore theater, such attractions as are being offered; as mentioned in the above paragraph, could not be brought to Salem. It is fitting that Salem people should show their loyalty, both on account of their new and unique theater and because of the effort being put forth to get Salem into the class of first class cities in this field.

FIFTY-FIVE
Clay pleaded rather than protested. "Why, what'll mother THINK? Why did you tell her we'd come? Gee, we've got to go now."

It could not be expected that Eve would be reasonable in her present temper. "I'm not going, that's all. If I go anywhere it'll be to my home—mother's." She choked over that word "home."

"So do you love FISHING, it seems," she responded sarcastically. "Oh, God, I'm sorry Eve."

His tone touched her, after a moment she responded, "Please go over to your mother's. I'll phone her and give some excuse for myself—that I have to go over to my mother's, or something."

"I don't know..." Her voice trailed away to nothingness. As he sat there staring at her his expression gradually changed with the trend of his thoughts, and his lips became tightly compressed.

"I know I did wrong, but if you didn't love John Ingate you would forgive me." Eve winced. "Oh, Clay! Oh! Words failed her as a new wave of tears appeared.

"You've never stopped loving him," Clay pressed on relentlessly. The only response was a soft sob. "You haven't any room to talk, whatever I've done."

To all of this her inner self had no answer, for it was being borne upon her in her sorely troubled state of mind that perhaps she had wronged Clay. But even as her thoughts hovered in this direction they were brought sharply back by remembrance of his infidelity. And with a very common woman: That was what hurt most.

"I'll do anything you say," Clay went on, "but you must quit working for John Ingate."

Eve drew herself up with contempt showing in her red, tear-soaked eyes. "If I had not toiled every day in John Ingate's office to get the extra money we needed to keep us going—and pay your gambling debts; if I had never seen John Ingate or any other man after our marriage; then, Clay, would you have been true to me? Can you honestly say so?"

She could not hold his gaze. He fumbled again for a cigarette. "You never wanted to go anywhere—I—"

She broke in: "If there hadn't been my income, what kind of evenings out could we have afforded? How many shows do you think we could have gone to? and how many times do you suppose we could have gone to Charley's for dinner? Dances cost money, too. You know—"

"You're always throwing my small salary up to me," Clay interrupted. "You don't have to spend a lot of money to have a good time." He suppressed a yawn and took up the comic section of the Sunday paper.

"Oh, you DON'T? Well, you haven't been getting along on less than twice as much for spending money as I have for all my petty expenses, as well as all you can beg out of me, and take out of my purse. Oh, I've noticed your little thefts out of my purse!"

"There's no use talking, Clay. You've surrendered every right to me."

Car Service Asked
A large number of persons living between Eugene and Springfield have filed protest with the public service commission against the proposed action of the railroad company in eliminating its street-car service between the two cities. It was said that buses would replace the streetcars.

my whole-hearted love, and that's what you had... Oh, and I thought you loved me!"

"I do, Eve, I DO!" he protested. "Because I went out with someone doesn't mean that I don't love you. You went to places with others— Oh, Eve, dearest, all men do this sort of thing. Wives ought to expect it. The men don't mean anything by it—it's just natural. They can love a wife and still like to fool with others. Just like friends, I mean."

His wife smiled grimly. "Do you believe the rule ought to work both ways; that what's sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose? Are you willing for me to have all the men friends I want?"

"But men are different— And besides, you only want one man." She did not let him complete the sentence. "And have you diversified your FRIENDSHIPS at these LODGE meetings?" She shrugged as she arose and began clearing away the breakfast dishes, which scarcely had been touched. She was feeling better now.

To this, as she suspected, there was no answer... What did Clay see in that woman? And wherein was that woman more attractive than herself? In her mind there was no comparison. The thought of the commonness of the other woman hurt. It would have been easier to bear if the rival had happened to be more beautiful, wealthier, with other charms. But THAT woman!

"I wish you would go to your mother's," she said. "She wants to see you, I know. Please don't neglect her, Clay. You mean so much to her."

"Please go with me, dear... I know—"

She shook her head. "I want to be alone today... But I may go out before you come back."

"I'll go, but you must promise me you won't go away, leave me, or anything—"

"I can't promise that now, Clay."

"Eve, I love you." He pushed himself down at her feet and wet her hands with many kisses.

"Oh, Clay, it used to be that when you told me that I was the happiest woman in the world. Now I'm the saddest." She looked reflectively out of the window. What was she going to do... If only she knew WHAT to do... And what would be best for Clay as well as herself?

That afternoon, alone with her thoughts, she made her decision. (To be continued.)
