228,432 CANS IN DAY: HUNT CANNERY

All the Canners and Packers of Salem Are Very Much Rushed With Work

On Tuesday and Tuesday night, in a 24 hour day, the Hunt Bros. Co. cannery in Salem packed 9518 cases, which means 228,432 cans, 24 to the case. The same day, the combined output of their Salem and Albany canneries was 13,819 cases, or 331,584 cans, or at the rate of about a million cans every three days.

About three years ago, this same reporter was able to record the fact that the Hunt cannery in Salem had made a record run of 5000 cases, or 120,000 cans—and that seemed at the time a stupendous day's work.

Well, one of these days, when things get thoroughly limbered up, most any day now, the output of this Salem cannery will be 10,000 cases, or 240,000 cans, or twice the record of the former year. And even then W. G. Allen, the manager for the Hunt people will not be satisfied. He will probably feel like he has done a decent day's work when he gets up to a million cans for the Salem institution.

All the Salem canneries are very busy. The Hunt cannery is on loganberries, black and red raspberries, black and Royal Ann cherries, with some strawberries coming in; in considerable quantities from the hill yards. Full 24 hour shifts are at work.

The Oregon Packing company is probably not far if any behind on total pack, but the reporter was not given the figures. They are using night forces on loganberries, and are busy on cherries, raspberries and strawberries.

Paulus & Co. are running full handed in canning loganberries, and dehydrating both loganberries and black cap raspberries. They want all the black caps they can get.

Libby, McNeill & Libby are taking great quantities of loganberries from that plant to their cannery at The Dalles, also some strawberries yet.

The Northwest cannery is working on loganberries, raspberries and cherries; working some forces at night.

The West Salem cannery is running 'till 10 o'clock at night; busy on loganberries, Royal Ann and raspberries. Drying some black cap raspberries. Sending some black caps to the dryer. They are canning some Bings and Lamberts.

The Producers' cannery is busy on logans, and finishing cherries and black caps. Running some forces at night.

The Starr cannery is running two shifts, day and night, on loganberries. Getting fine berries.

Baker, Kelly & McLaughlin are full handed on logans, with some strawberries from the hills, at their Salem barreling plant, in the Salem Fruit Union building. Running their plants with small forces at Lebanon and Albany.

Black Cherry Shippers.

The black cherry shippers are all covered up with over supplies. Young & Wells, at the end of the big bridge, foot of Center street, need 40 more women for a night force, for packing Lamberts. Shipped three cars yesterday. Snowed under with Lamberts.

Denny & Co. shipped three cars of Lamberts yesterday, running 'till 11 o'clock last night.

The cherry pool people are covered up. Shipped one car yesterday. Hope to ship two today. Want an extra force of women for packing. Are getting some Bings and Black Republican; mostly Lamberts. At the Pacific Fruit & Produce company plant.

The Drafer Fruit company will commence putting dried loganberries into cartons today; ready for the markets.

INVALID BECOMES LIFE SAVING STAR

Will Instruct at Red Cross Institute at Seaside Next Week

More than a million and a half Americans have witnessed demonstrations of first aid and life saving methods performed by Commodore W. E. Longfellow, national swimming expert of the American Red Cross, who, together with Edwin H. Carroll of San Francisco, life saving director for the Red Cross western territory, will conduct the Red Cross institute at Seaside the week of June 20 to 26, inclusive.

Commodore Longfellow is one of the best known authorities on first aid and life saving. At one time he was a semi-invalid, weighing only 100 pounds, and compelled to wear a plaster cast for two years, during which time he used to direct from a rowboat the training of life guards in the New York life guard service. He now weighs 230 pounds, and by practice and application has perfected his swimming technique so that, among many, other remarkable things, he can tow two people at one time, bring up and land 40 pounds of iron, float and support on his chest a six-year-old child.

LIST TRADE NAME TO PROTECT GOODS

F. Burns Details Value of Retaining Designations for Products

One of the most valuable assets to any business is its trade name. F. Burns told members of the Salem Rotary club Wednesday noon. Burns is secretary of the Northwest Cannery's association.

It is by the trade name that the quality of a manufacturer's goods becomes known to the world he said. Burns stated that a company should have its trade name registered as well as copyrighted. The copyright merely protects the sales value of the name, that is, a copyrighted label can not be imitated in design. But to protect the name itself, it is necessary to register.
