

Last Year's Average of One New Home a Day to be Surpassed in 1926

New Design of Home is Attractive
Plan Number 430

An attractive 4-room bungalow is shown in the house design for today.

With the semi-colonial lines for the exterior the house would make an attractive dwelling for the small town lot, or with proper landscaping for the suburban home.

Four rooms are provided for on the ground floor, and the spacious living room, equipped with a fireplace is especially desirable. It will be noticed that both the living room and dining room are at the front of the house, while the bedroom, bath and kitchen at the rear are entirely separated and form a complete compartment on the ground floor. By means of the archway between the living room and dining room these two rooms can be used as one.

The kitchen space is economically arranged so as to lessen the steps of the housewife, which the breakfast nook opening at the rear of the kitchen gives the occupant ample room to serve informal family meals.

It will be noted that all of the rooms on the ground floor have two exposures, thereby insuring adequate ventilation.

The attic, if finished, has plenty of room for two chambers.

FURNITURE STORE GETS MORE ROOM

Giese-Powers Fine New Addition Soon to Be Ready for Occupancy

The new addition to the Giese-Powers furniture company will soon be finished and ready for use. The new building, which is of re-enforced concrete, is back of the present store. The second floor which will be used as the salesroom is 52 by 100 feet. This room will be used to display bedroom furniture. Eighteen steel frame windows 6 1/2 by 7 1/2 feet afford the best of light and ventilation. The floor will be finished in natural wood and the walls and ceiling is being decorated by Gabriel Brothers' painting crew. The entrance to this salesroom is from the second floor of the main store over a re-enforced concrete arch that spans the alley.

The lower floor of the new building will accommodate the shipping room with the garages for the delivery cars adjoining on the alley side. Next to the shipping room is the upholstering room and back of that room is the furniture refinishing room. The most modern equipment has been purchased for this department. Mr. Giese states that this equipment is the same as used in the large modern furniture factories for finishing work. Used furniture will be refinished here as well as special order work done.

An electric elevator is in operation between the shipping room and the new salesroom, the entire arrangement is made to give the merchandise the best possible display and enable the company to handle the goods easily and quickly.

The room to the rear of the main store which has been used as the shipping room will be refinished and remodeled and used to display the ranges and linoleums.

The new addition will relieve the congestion in the main sales room and will afford a much better display of all merchandise throughout the store.

The Giese-Powers furniture store is managed by C. F. Giese of Salem and owned jointly by him and Ira F. Powers, of the Powers Furniture company of Portland. Mr. Powers has interests in many furniture stores throughout the northwest. He is celebrating his sixtieth anniversary in the furniture business in Portland with a gigantic sale.

TRUE STORY OF FLINTLOCK BEAR TOLD

commanding officer always knew that he could depend on him in any difficult place or count on him in time of danger.

There was once a boy very much like Samuel Adam. He could always tell how the game was won, though he was the poorest player on the team, and his mistakes were sometimes costly.

He liked to boast about how his school won the championship, but if all had been like him there would have been no championship for his school.

He liked to explain how "we did it," though his captain left him sitting on the bench most of the time during the games. The boy who really won the games more often than any other member, because he was the best player, seldom said much about it.

He was like Betty who killed the bear; like Patrick Kirby who carried the message through to its destination. I think I'd like to be like Betty, or Patrick. Courage is not really mean one must run into danger when there is no need, but when duty calls, to be ever ready to answer and do one's part.

SHIPLEY REMODEL WORK IS PUSHED

New Front Expected to Be Completed Within Next Two Weeks

Work of tearing down the show window of U. C. Shipley's dry-goods store on Liberty street has been completed, and the new front is expected to be completed by two weeks more, according to H. G. Carl, builder. The front will cost between $2,000 and $3,500 when completed, he states.

Fifty-five 100-watt lights will be installed in the windows, with a Multilite trough lighting system in the center showcase. Three ceiling lights will be present. The whole lighting system can be controlled by a master switch.

The window will be 28 feet deep, with a large 16 by 18-foot showcase in the center and two entrances. The back and sides will be paneled with art glass, and hardwood floors will be installed in the cases.

The aisles will be floored with chipped marble set in plaster and ground down to level, giving the same flooring effect that is used in many modern theater and store entrances.

The ceiling will be plastered this week, as the first part of building the new window. Panels have already been installed in the rear.

Work on the inside of the store has been practically completed, except for parts which must wait on the completion of the new window.

SPRING FOOTWEAR
Parchment is one of the most popular shades of footwear, often combined with a darker tone.

BLIGH MATERIALS MAKE HIGH TOTAL

Construction Values Show Character of New Theatre Building

The balcony of the new Bligh theater building is being completed this week, according to Frank D. Bligh, owner. Concrete for it is now being poured. The walls to the roof joists will be finished soon. Partitions are being installed in the offices upstairs and the stores downstairs.

They will be ready for plastering by the last of the week, according to Mr. Bligh's statement. The roof has already been finished on the corner section.

All brick for the new structure was made at Willamina, near Sheridan. The lumber, cement, and other building material was purchased in Salem. Tranchell & Farrell are contractors and Tourtelotte & Hammill architects.

The amounts of various materials used, as given out by Mr. Bligh, are as follows: 60 tons of brick, and the amount of dirt excavated was 8,000 yards.

Values of various items in the construction given out are labor, $50,000; plastering, $35,000; terra cotta trimming, $7,775; sheet metal work, $11,000; excavating, $5,000; plumbing and painting, $21,741, and the electrical contract, $8,000.

TERRIBLE THORNE GIRL

ment it was reported to her that her husband's car was parked in front of it at half-past one in the morning.

She had been reading until quite late and wondering how much truth there was in the tale of a poker party at the club, when her two informants burst in. One of them was "Wally" Pickering, a rather effeminate little scribbler, technically known as a "rag man"; the other was Sheila Anderson a violent creature of whom it had been not inappropriately said that she was the sort of a girl who, if any man invited her to "walk home" would be apt to make him do the walking instead. Sheila had a flaming temper and a swift tongue, and she had been one of the contestants for the role of Celeste in "The Miracle of Notre Dame."

Now that Sylvia had won the coveted prize it was scarcely to be expected that Miss Anderson's feelings toward her would be friendly. One of the penalties that Sylvia had paid for her success was the envy, in some cases the open hatred, of the fifty or more candidates she had defeated.

And Wally Pickering was Sheila's "boy friend" eager to do anything in his power to win her tempestuous regard. Their car was at the door; they were only too ready to accompany Mrs. Harmon in the role of witnesses. To discredit Sylvia meant more than the satisfying of a feeling of envy—it meant, most likely, another choice of a woman to play the part of Celeste—a choice which Miss Anderson believed in her heart should have fallen—might still conceivably fall—upon her.

She explained to Mrs. Harmon as they drove off, how she and Wally had been passing the bungalow, had seen Sydney's car drawn up before its door; she did not, however, deem it necessary to say that Mr. Pickering and herself had been watching the place for an hour, in the hope of making that very discovery. The car was still there when they arrived; with the feline instincts for which she was noted, Sheila had disdained the front door, had led her companions to the rear of the house, anticipating an excellent view through the glass doors.

"She had not anticipated, however, any such luck as to find one of these doors wide open. The silhouette afforded by the other brought them quickly into the house.

Sylvia, in a wispy negligee, slim, enticing, stood clasped in Sydney Harmon's arms, his lips crushed hungrily into the hollow of her throat. No wonder Mrs. Harmon had told her husband, with biting irony, that when he had finished his goodnights, there was something she had to say. What she said was crisp and to the point.

"You needn't come home tonight, Sydney," she remarked frostily. "If you do, I shan't let you in. My lawyer will see you in the morning." Then she had marched out, tight-lipped, followed by her delighted companions.

Sylvia was a girl of more than ordinary courage, but the words sent a quick spasm of fear through her. She had never before been so though transfixed by an icy spear. Then she made one attempt to explain what she knew must seem beyond explanation.

"Mrs. Harmon!" she gasped; "oh—wait—please! But that lady had already vanished in the shadows of the porch, without deigning to turn her head. Although Sylvia did not know it, Isobel Harmon had heard a good deal about her husband's visits to the bungalow, since her return from New York had left her speechless, rigid, in her efforts to determine which of the two girls it was, that attracted Sydney there. * Now she felt that she knew.

As for that philandering young gentleman, who should have done the explaining—have flung himself into the breach and saved Sylvia from the wolves while there was still time—he had remained silent, staring stupidly at his wife, his brain still befuddled by the liquor he had consumed. Sylvia gazed at him scornfully, contemptuously, as she might have gazed at some poisonous reptile.

Then she pointed to the window. "Quick!" she exclaimed—"tell her! Tell all of them, before this lie gets spread about! And tell them the truth, as I shall!" Mr. Harmon staggered out, hatless, his footsteps scuffling uncertainly upon the tiled floor of the porch. Sylvia closed the door. If she only had not opened it—yet it had been her only avenue of escape. Had the whole scene been rehearsed in advance, she reflected bitterly, it could not have been more perfectly arranged for her destruction.

Sinking limply into a chair she took quick stock of the situation. Three persons knew the truth—three persons could tell what had happened in such a way as to exonerate her completely. She was one of the three herself, but the other two, Jean and Sydney—Sylvia refused to believe for a moment that they would allow her to suffer for what was in no way her fault.

Her own story was simple enough—her return from Mrs. Allison's party to find Jean ill—her going into the kitchen in her negligee to prepare her a hot drink—Sydney Harmon's enforced entrance, drunk—his refusal to leave without kissing her, and her disgusted consent, in order to get rid of him and thus avoid a scandal.

All this seemed clear and reasonable, but—would it be believed? Probably not, without corroboration, since any woman, caught in a similar situation, might suffer such an excuse. But she had Sydney to attest the truth of the story—no doubt he had by this time already done so—and Jean. Of course everything would be explained.

plained. She got up and went to Jean's door, which was closed.

Was the girl awake? If so, it seemed strange that she had remained in her room, with such exciting events taking place outside.

Very softly Sylvia pushed open the door, switched on the lights.

With a shock she realized that Jean was asleep—or pretending to be. There was the aspirin she had taken, of course—the fever—the hot water bag at her feet—the closed door. And Mrs. Harmon had scarcely raised her voice above a biting whisper. As Sylvia stood in the doorway, undecided whether or not to awaken the girl, Jean turned and stared with blinking eyes at the light.

discussion that night, councilmen and Mayor Giesy considered hiring an attorney to take the case out of Williams' hands, as he is not in the employ of Parker stages.

Oren Williams of Silverton was found not guilty of the charge of driving while intoxicated. The trial was held in the police court, about half an hour being taken for the jury to reach its decision.

Four initiative measures had made the grade to a place on the November election ballot when filing time for initiative petitions closed. Two income tax measures, a fish proposal and a bus bill will be voted upon.

Unobserved as they placed a ladder against the inside walls of the Oregon state penitentiary, cut the barbed wire entanglements on the top of the parapet and dropped to freedom on the other side, four convicts escaped from the prison under full view of tower guards. They got away unnoticed and first intimation of the escape came when a tower guard discovered the severed wires. Those who escaped were: Walter Fisher, 22, from Jefferson county; Richard Moore, 21, from Multnomah; Richard Franzien, 23, from Multnomah and Elliott Mitchener, 21, from Multnomah.
