Modern Girl Interested In Home Building and Housekeeping

PRACTICE HOUSE at the UNIVERSITY of ARIZONA

Pessimists who in fiction and other mediums portray the girl of today as interested chiefly in unwholesome excitement are all wrong, according to the group of experts who have been securing the co-operation of schools and colleges in the better homes movement. Miss F22 expects to have a home and wants to know how to keep it efficient and attractive.

The lower picture shows the two "home management" houses at the University of Minnesota, at St. Paul. Both of these were planned and erected by the University in 1923. One house is a frame one, the other stucco. The same plan was followed in building both houses, each containing seven bedrooms, living room, dining room, a study, a kitchen, a laundry and two baths. A group of students and an instructor live in each house. The houses are located on the edge of the University campus.

Better Homes in America, a non-commercial educational organization headed by Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, is deeply interested in furthering the school practice house and home economics cottage movements among the schools and colleagues of the country. Recently, specialists at national headquarters of Better Homes in America made the most complete survey of this situation that has yet been attempted. Their findings have been published in a pamphlet entitled "School Cottages for Home-making."

The other picture depicts the practice house at the University of Arizona. This has a living room, sleeping porch, kitchen, laundry and bath. Two home economics teachers live there with the rotating groups of girl students. Instruction is given in cooking, washing, ironing, cleaning, table setting and serving, household buying, budget making, and household management.

Groups of not more than four girls spend from five to six weeks in the house in this course. This school practice house is open to the public at all times. The University is planning for a new practice house to be located on the campus.

During Better Homes Week, April 25 to May 1, hundreds of Better Homes will be demonstrated to the local public in cities, towns and villages throughout America. The headquarters of this movement are at Washington and its educational work is for the promotion of improved housing and wholesome home life.

OHIO SWEEP BY STORMS

SEVERE WIND AND HEAVY RAIN DO MUCH DAMAGE

COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 6.—(By Associated Press)—High winds and torrential rains, accompanied by spectacular lightning displays descended upon Ohio today in a furious onslaught.

Most damage was done at Dayton, where the rainfall assumed cloudburst proportions. In 35 minutes 1.91 inches of rain fell, flooding the streets, causing wooded paving to buckle up, and putting out of commission virtually all the long distance telephone lines entering the city. Damage may reach $100,000.

Darkness of night accompanied the racing wind and swirling rain. In most sections it was necessary for automobiles to turn on the headlights of their cars and office workers to perform their tasks by electric light.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSE FUND QUIZ ENDED

No Action Is Taken to Limit Expenditures by Adjoining Congress

WASHINGTON, July 6.—(By Associated Press)—The senate quit today for the off year election campaign without taking action on either of the proposals advanced for amendments of its rules to limit expenditures by candidates in senatorial primaries.

Senator LaFollette, republican, Wisconsin, a member of the campaign funds committee which has disclosed an outlay of more than three million dollars in the recent Pennsylvania republican primary, had his amendment referred to this committee after he had become satisfied that action on it before adjournment was only a question.

Several attempts were made by Neely, democrat, West Virginia, to get unanimous consent for consideration of his resolution limiting outlays in primaries but objections were made by several senators who said they wanted time to discuss the question.

The West Virginian then gave notice that he would make a motion to take up the resolution, but he was prevented from doing so by a filibuster staged during the last half hour of the session by Senator Cramer, republican, Arizona.

This filibuster also prevented acting chairman King of the campaign funds committee offering a resolution proposing to certify to the attorney general, the record of testimony as to whether F. X. O'Connor, a South Philadelphia magistrate, had stated that the organization of William S. Vare, the successful senatorial candidate in the Pennsylvania primary had sought to purchase his support.

Senator Pepper, republican, Pennsylvania, and three reporters from the Philadelphia Public Ledger testified that O'Connor had made such a statement to them but the magistrate denied that he had done so.

Senator King announced later that the committee would seek to determine whether it can on its own motion refer this record to either the attorney general or the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia for any such action if any, as they might think warranted.

The rush attending the closing of congress upset the schedule of the committee but two executive sessions and a brief hearing were held before adjournment was taken until Tuesday when the members hope to conclude the Pennsylvania inquiry. The action was deferred until that time as to whether the investigators will make public the names of contributors of more than $500 to the Anti-Saloon league since 1917.

the league, has objected to the publication on the ground that contributions were not made to a political fund.

After the second executive session, Senator La Follette announced that he favored spreading the names on the committee record. Senator King then said that he and Senator Goff, republican, West Virginia wanted a full attendance of the members before a final decision.

Senator Reed, democrat, Missouri, the committee chairman, departed today for his home in Kansas City but he has left his vote on this question with the acting chairman. Senator McNary, republican, Oregon, was the other member absent at the second executive session.

INSPECTS OREGON PORTS

NATION MUST PLAN BEFORE WAR, MACNIDER SAYS

PORTLAND, July 6.—(By Associated Press)—Colonel Hamford MacNider, assistant secretary of war and former national commander of the American Legion, today inspected Portland's industries and port facilities as a part of his national tour in behalf of industrial preparedness as an insurance against war and aggression.

Colonel MacNider explained that the great plan of industrial preparedness is a move the nation is making to profit by the experiences of the late war and be ready for any future emergency. "We are taught then with a vengeance that no nation no matter how richly blessed with natural resources, facilities for rapid manufacture, expert and willing labor and untold ready funds, can wait until it is suddenly plunged into war to do its thinking and planning for such disastrous emergency," he declared.
