the effect that if they had understood the situation they would have sued the mill. The Japanese said they were "broke," the witness continued and he passed the hat collecting about $15. He said he turned this over to the spokesman of the Japanese who accepted it with a smile.

Wirfs said that most of the yelling which attended the affair was done by children. Prosecution witnesses have testified that there were cries of "Get the Japs, drag them out." Wirfs denied that he had seen any Japanese man-handled or that doors of the Japanese residences had been broken in.

H. A. Schlecht followed Wirfs on the stand and was questioned closely by the prosecution as to what the whites intended doing in event the Japanese refused to leave Toledo. The witness replied that there were no plans beyond attempting to peacefully persuade the Japanese to depart. He added that the Japanese had not been abused and there had been no threats of violence.

Asked who led the crowd of whites, Schlecht answered: "The crowd was led by the flag."

Richard W. Brooks who at various times had worked for the spruce corporation testified that the Japanese were treated in a kindly manner and that after the situation had been explained to them they said they would not have come to Toledo.

Mrs. Inez Riggs, who was visiting in Toledo when the eviction occurred was called and denied seeing any violence against the Japanese. She said she joined the crowd of whites and entered the house of Ito Kawamoto, who testified previously that he was beaten and dragged out. Mrs. Riggs asserted that Kawamoto had not been injured in any way.

Court adjourned late today to reconvene Monday afternoon.

IS BACK IN SALEM AND HERE TO STAY

F. H. Zinser Sees Many Improvements Here, and Looks for More

F. H. Zinser is back in Salem to stay. He sees many improvements in this city, made in his two years of absence, and he believes there will be great expansion here in most lines in the near future.

Mr. Zinser was for two and a half years in charge of the Boy Scout work in Salem, and he made a capable executive and accomplished a good work. About two years ago he went to Spokane, to take up the same line of work.

He now represents the Northern Savings and Loan association of Portland, with offices in the Oregon building.

Mr. Zinser kept his eyes and ears open during his absence from the capital city, and he gathered some ideas that he thinks will be helpful here, which he hopes to help work out for the good of the city of his first love and of his present choice.
