PEACE OVERTURES FAIL IN MEXICAN SITUATION

In some sections, but from this information it appears that nothing serious has developed anywhere. Reports are that 17 persons have been arrested and charged with removing treasures and valuable objects from Catholic churches. The Mexico City authorities are investigating reports of municipal committees appointed to take over the churches that valuables are missing from many of the edifices, including the cathedral. While the cathedral continues closed pending a further check of the inventory of its treasures, the other churches were open again today, although only a moderate number of worshippers were seen inside in Mexico City.

Thus far there is little or no evidence of the boycott under the auspices of the League for the Defense of Religious Freedom in Mexico City, although some commercial houses and retailers express as apprehension that it may develop. In contrast, news from other sections of the republic shows that the boycott is in full swing in numerous towns, the people refraining from all possible expenditures in the hope of creating an economic crisis sufficiently serious to influence the government to modify its regulations.

There have been numerous joint debates, with speakers representing both sides of the controversy, but thus far all have been peaceful.

The first debate in Mexico City was between the secretary of education, Dr. Jose Puig Casauranc, and Rene Capistran Garza, one of the directors of the league for the defense of religious liberty, who is under bail awaiting formal trial on the charge of inciting the people to disturbance by means of the boycott.

This debate was conducted in Mexico City theatre and was largely attended by an orderly crowd. Each side cheered as points were scored.

DIVORCE ASKED

Speeding up now—
All the canneries and packing houses.
The two green prune shipping concerns sent out 13 cars yesterday; Young & Wells five cars, and Denney & Co. eight cars. They are both working overtime. The end of the green prune shipping season will come soon, perhaps with the end of this week.

The Salem store of Burnett Bros. will celebrate its third birthday tomorrow, and the event will be featured in royal fashion. There will be 1,000 safety razors to be given away to the men folks, and 1,000 table mats will be presented to the ladies who attend the party. Other features are to be announced in the newspapers.

Copies of The Statesman containing the series of editorial articles on the sugar industry are going to persons interested in the development of this industry here, and extra slips will be printed and preserved, to be used in the same way, and to help in interesting the farmers of the Salem district who will be asked to grow the beets for Salem's first factory. Perhaps other uses will be found for the series.

The surest way to secure beet sugar factories in the Willamette valley is to get our people to thinking sugar; to get them to realize the value of the sugar industry to the men on the land, both direct and indirect; and especially indirect. And the immense benefits that will accrue to the cities where the factories are to be located.

The time is now ripe for the development of the beet sugar industry in this valley. The biggest thing in respect to its ripeness is the ravages of the beet leaf hopper in a number of the sugar districts of the country, putting at least 10 of the 11 idle factories in this country out of business, and crippling others. Our immunity from this pest is the big thing.

Dr. G. R. Vehrs has received from San Francisco the developed moving pictures he took on the recent tour of the flax fields, of the dinner at the Pete Thomasson place, and the inspection of the Miles linen mill. The pictures show up very well.
