The program of the day opened with the singing of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Rev. G. W. Hickman was the song leader for the occasion.

Fifteen communities were represented when the roll call of Oregon towns was made.

W. A. Delzell, secretary to the governor, was chosen as the speaker for the day. Mr. Delzell, in a few appropriate words, told of the splendid blood in those who were Minnesota pioneers, later emigrating Oregon, to which the descendants of these pioneers brought the best. Mr. Delzell compared the love of those gathered in memory of Minnesota days to the love a man holds toward his mother, while this newer loyalty to Oregon may be compared to a man's love for his bride. Mr. Van Slyke contributed to the program an appropriate reading, "Old Minnesota."

With the close, very late in the afternoon, of the seventh annual picnic, the members began at once to plan for the third annual mid-winter gathering which will take place probably in January.

the only one drinking the tea. After taking several sips she became violently ill and did not recover for several days.

To the astonishment of the spectators, a brother of the late Adriaan Beekman, first of the four in the romantic killings, marched down the aisle of the court room carrying under his arm the alleged missing documents for which the state has been searching for weeks.

This witness, Marcus Beekman, was denounced by Senator Simpson, for allegedly trying to auction the documents to the highest bidder. Beekman denied he had tried to sell the papers. He said he had found the papers among his brother's effects.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS DISCUSSED BY JOHNSON

the maintenance of the protective tariff were the two principal reasons why the world hated the United States." He declared they were also the real reasons for the prosperity of the United States and confided:

"Our prosperity will last until we are pressed by increase in population from our own lines. The only cloud on the horizon of prosperity is the ease with which we go into debt when we are prosperous. Take the advice of our very sensible President Coolidge—save a little, nationally—locally—and personally."

compliment to Senators Jones of Washington, Borah of Idaho and McNary of Oregon. All were positive leaders, he said. He also complimented Congressman Hawley of Oregon for his work for tax revision and predicted that the next revision would provide for a simple one sheet form of reports by those with incomes under $1,000. Johnson said that he had worked hard for that year and that General Lord, director of the budget, had endorsed the idea with the statement that in less than three years we will be ashamed of ourselves for our cumbersome methods of income tax collection.

hands tightly in his lap and edged up a bit in his chair. His wife breathed rapidly.

Sterns was called to the stand. Going back to a month before the killing, the witness testified that he was painting the ceiling in a bedroom of the Gaines' home. Sylvia came into the room, and he said, rolled up one of her sleeves, displaying marks on her arm. She said her father had inflicted them.

Stern had been held in a county stockade five weeks as a material witness and in Seattle a week before Gaines was arrested, June 29. He is a painter for the county and has known Gaines and his wife three years.

He testified that Friday preceding Sylvia's death he saw Gaines and Sylvia.

Gaines said: "My daughter is going away—I'm going to get her a ticket and she is going home." And she said: "Good bye, Mr. Stern, I'm going home." Apparently she looked sore. It was as if something had happened at home—she looked awful mean."

Stern related that about six weeks before the killing Gaines wrecked his automobile and that a mechanic was called to repair it.

Wurster testified that he pulled an automobile out of a ravine near Stern's home about the date Stern fixed.

"I offered to drive the man who called me, to his home" he testified.

"We went to Gaines' address. The next morning I noted the car's peculiarities. It has marks which I remember. I was paid for the repairs with a government check made out to Wallace C. Gaines. I noticed this car three times after that. The last time I saw it, it was parked on East Green Lake Way, near the garbage dump, about 9 o'clock the evening of June 16."

Wurster was shown Gaines' automobile Thursday night. The state has impounded it.

"A detective was about to pull the garage open Thursday night," the mechanic said. "I told him it was the same car I saw near the murder scene there would be a crank in the rear. On this crank I told him there would be a rough spot on which I cut my finger when I tried to crank the car." The crank was found and I pointed out the spot where I cut my finger.

"There's no mistake." "It was the car I saw on the edge of Green Lake the night the girl was murdered."

Three persons had testified that a man resembling Gaines was seen by them near the lake about the time of the killing. One woman declared he in no way looked like a man she saw there."

MYSTERY ENTERS

DEATH FALL CASE

Search for Companion Begins, After Reconciliation With Mate

(By Associated Press.)—Investigation into the death here last night of Mrs. Bernard Haynes, who fell or was pushed from her room window in a downtown hotel, led the police to search tonight for a man with whom they believe she had been friendly here since she left her husband in Yakima, on July 24.

The husband, Charles Haynes, who came here yesterday with their three year old daughter in an effort to effect a reconciliation, is firm in his belief that she was murdered, pointing to the bruises on her face and the fact that witnesses declared she alighted on the back of her head when she fell from the window of her room.

He told Deputy Prosecutor Frank Funkhouser, and city detectives who questioned him this afternoon that when his wife left him at his apartments here last night after they had dinner together she was in good spirits and had consented to return with him to Yakima, where her mother, Mrs. M. L. Kagy, resides.

Deputy Prosecutor Funkhouser indicated a belief that Mrs. Haynes had committed suicide, while police officials said they believed she had fallen from the window. Persons who saw her fall from the window told conflicting stories today as to the manner in which she emerged.
