

Alkali Charged Water Believed to Be Killing Thousands of Ducks

TESTS INDICATE NO GERM PRESENT

Investigations to Continue Under Direction of Veterinarian

The so-called duck disease that has resulted in killing thousands of birds in the Malheur lake district in Harney county, appears to be in the form of alkali poisoning produced through excessive drinking and contact with heavy alkali charged water, according to Dr. W. H. Lytle, state veterinarian, who has returned here after making an investigation of the malady.

"There are several features in connection with the disease to be developed before a positive statement may be made that alkali poisoning is the direct cause of the trouble," said Dr. Lytle. "Last year the disease was present in the Tule lake district in northern Klamath county. Various theories were advanced as to the cause, ranging from carbonic gas resulting from decaying vegetation in the lake bed to goose septicemia. The same disease apparently was present in the Malheur lake district last year, but no report of it was made until late in the fall.

"At that time a member of the United States biological survey estimated that 40,000 birds had died of the disease in the Malheur lake district. It has been estimated that more than 100,000 birds died in the Tule lake district. The conclusion was reached by counting the number of dead ducks on one acre and multiplying that by the number of acres in the reserves.

"Late last July it was discovered that a large number of ducks were dying in the Malheur lake district and Ray C. Steele, United States game warden, made an investigation of the situation. He procured samples of water and also some sick ducks for examination. He failed to reach any definite conclusion at that time as to the cause of the disease.

"It has been determined definitely that practically all sick ducks recovered when placed in contact with running water. Most of the ducks that have died in the Malheur lake district were found to have harbored a number of water leech in the upper air passages. Local conditions, supported by the reports of investigators at first indicated that the malady was caused by this parasite. Later investigations proved that the presence of the parasite was incidental and takes place only after the duck becomes paralyzed from the alkali poisoning. It was found that it would be impossible to place the water leech in the nostrils of a well duck.

"The Oregon lakes, in a number of instances, have become highly charged with alkaline salts through an excessive evaporation that has occurred during a cycle of dry years. Malheur lake probably is the largest bird refuge in the United States and many thousands of birds assemble there each year.

"Investigation will be made by Mr. Steele and other officials to determine if alkaline wells cannot be bored in the Malheur lake district. There are several of these wells near the lake at the present time. Some of these discharge a large sulphur content, which would prove a neutralizing agent against alkaline water. If a sufficient flow of artesian water, charged with sulphur, could be obtained, the difficulty would be solved.

"In the Tule lake district it is not likely that flowing wells could be obtained. In this district it may be possible to frighten the birds away to other refuges. Both Clear lake and Klamath lake are near at hand and are filled with fresh water.

"Sick ducks have been delivered to the veterinary department of OAC for test experiments. There also has been delivered to the institutions a quantity of the alkali earth laden salts to determine if the poisoning can be produced in wild ducks. Examinations made recently in Malheur lake district indicated that no infectious disease is prevalent there. Normal blood counts were found in all ailing birds and no evidence of disease was present.

"At the present time the duck disease in the Malheur lake district has been greatly reduced, apparently through a discontinuance of irrigation in the Blitzen river district, which is a heavily alkali region, and drains into Malheur lake. Mr. Steele has been detailed to remain in the Malheur lake district until the fall rains set in, and thorough investigations will be made as to the possibilities for avoiding the loss and determining the cause of the malady."

Sunday Baseball Is Moral Philadelphia Judge Holds

"Does Not Tend to Immortality or Corruption of Youth," Opinion Reads, "and Spiritual Persons Will Never Be Swerved By Lure of Game"

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 23.—(By Associated Press.)—Baseball is probably the popular pastime in America and is not an unlawful or disorderly sport in the opinion of Judge Frank Smith, who today granted an injunction restraining peace officers from interfering with a game between the Philadelphia Athletics and the Chicago White Sox at the Shibe Park tomorrow.

Judge Smith held that professional baseball may be played in this city on Sunday free from police interference unless a breach of peace occurs at the game or a nuisance is created.

"Baseball does not tend to immortality or the corruption of youth," said the opinion. "It tends to take a person into the open who might otherwise spend his time to his own disadvantage. Those whose inclinations run to spiritual recreation and meditation will never be swerved by the lure of baseball."

In a supplementary statement, Judge Smith pointed out that the Sunday closing law of 1794 was not invalidated by the action of the court, and that warrants may be obtained for the alleged violation of the statute, the maximum penalty for which is a fine of $2.

"There is plenty of opportunity for the opponents of Sunday baseball to appeal to higher courts," he said.

Application for the injunction was made by the Philadelphia American league baseball club after Mayor Kendrick had announced that he would use the full power of his administration to prevent the playing of the proposed game. The action was an outgrowth of the sequel-centennial exposition program of an "open Sunday." After the exposition authorities had announced that a 50-cent admission would be charged on the Sabbath, with all other amusements free, contact for the Athletics said they felt justified in bringing a "test case" to determine whether Sunday baseball was legal.

SPORTS DONE BROWN

BY NORMAN E. BROWN

There will be a well defined contrast in styles of fighting when Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney meet for the heavyweight crown the former now holds. Dempsey is the crouching, bulldog, boring in type of fighter, whose best defense is his morning offense. Tunney stands erect and prefers to box until he has found his opening—then hits.

This contrast, however, is not unusual in heavyweight title bouts. The fact of the matter is that every heavy king since the days when John L. Sullivan ruled through the revolutionary period in the game has gone down to defeat at the hands of a different type of fighter than himself.

The boxing world knows that John L. hero of the bare knuckle days and a man who fell before the scientific jab of Jim Corbett, was a heavyweight fighter, a rushing, driving fighter who sought to beat down his opponent by brute strength.

Corbett, the man who dethroned him, was the direct antithesis of this type—a light, shifty, clever boxer—master of the science of the game. He was the first man of that type that Sullivan had met. Perhaps, had John L. met the clever Peter Jackson, Australian heavy, before fighting Corbett, the "grand old man" might have learned something of the game he was to face against Gentleman Jim. As it was he was bewildered.

Corbett, on the other hand, met his Waterloo at the hands of a cunning mixture of boxer and fighter—Bob Fitzsimmons. Curly Bob was perhaps the craftiest of the heavyweight kings. He packed, moreover, a terrific short arm punch which, when it lit on an opponent's jaw, knocked him out neatly and with dispatch. In Corbett's case Fitz applied that short poke to the solar plexus, with equally disastrous results.

Jack Johnson, the man who lifted the title from Fitz's head, was a stocky, crouching antagonist, whose weight and build belied his speed. He was fast, a fair boxer, and had wonderful endurance—probably more than any of the other kings. He took a terrific beating from Bob Fitzsimmons in their second meeting before knocking out the Cornishman.

Jack Johnson, the man who took away Jeffries' title in actual combat, was a master of ring science and a hard hitter. His peculiar asset, however, was an exasperating manner of kidding his opponent into a mad and blind frenzy. Jeffries was beaten before he started his pathetic fight against Johnson, back in 1910, at Reno. The minute they squared off Johnson began baiting Jeffries with remarks and a broad grin of confidence. He talked almost incessantly, begging Jeffries to lead.

Willard's main asset, when he defeated the then dissipated Johnson, was a good defense. His great height and reach aided him in this department. He had a deadly blow in a straight right hand punch.

Dempsey, as most fans know, is a weaving, two-fisted fighter who counts on his swaying motion and the rivet hammer punches of his two fists to carry him through his opponent's guard. Once through he depends upon a right to the body and a left to the jaw or body to end things.

Miss Elizabeth Ryan, Vanquished, Returns to Win in Doubles

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 23.—(By A.P.)—With one of the most courageous uphill fights any tennis title battle has ever seen, Mrs. Molla B. Mallory plucked victory from the brink of defeat today against Miss Elizabeth Ryan and won the national women's singles championship for the 8th time.

Mrs. Mallory's come-back to the peak after an interval of three years was accomplished in spectacular fashion after she had lost the first four games of the final set and later been within a point of defeat. Against an opponent who had been a pronounced favorite to win, the 32-year-old New York woman, by her grit and the sheer power of her game, smashed her way to a thrilling victory by scores of 4-6, 6-4, 9-7.

Miss Ryan gathered some share of title glory when she returned to the courts later to win the doubles championship final with Miss Eleanor Goss as her partner. They defeated Miss Mary K. Browne of Santa Monica, Cal., and Mrs. Charlotte Hosmer Chapin of Springfield, Mass.

By lifting the big silver trophy for the eighth time Mrs. Mallory shattered all world's records for the number of victories in major national championships, here or abroad. No woman star, not even the great Suzanne Lenglen, has touched this mark, and in men's competition the record is seven triumphs, achieved first by R. D. Sears, the first American singles champion, and equalled later by William A. Larned.

HORSE IS KING WITH 101 SHOW

"A fellow's got to be a boss with this show to get any sort of a tumble from the girls," declares Hank Harnell, one of the cowboy champions with Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch real wild west and great far east, coming to Salem, Friday, September 3, and Hank is not far wrong, for the horse is king with 101.

There are 600 picked equines with the show, of all kinds, from all lands, with the western broncho predominating, of course, and the hundreds of cowboys, cowgirls and Indians will have no other kind of mounts. However, the Gossack circus boasts much blooded stock. Anyway, the horse is king, no matter what its breed, and the girls seem to have eyes for nothing else. And the girls with the show! They need no glorifying, and neither do the horses, for that matter.

MONTAVILLA HOLDS SENATORS 6 TO 4

John Harkins Hurling for Visiting Nine Allows Only Eight Hits

In spite of a last inning rally that threatened to tie the score, the Salem Senators lost the opening baseball game of the fall tournament to the Montavilla team 6 to 4 Sunday at Oxford park. John Harkins, Montavilla pitcher, who has gone through the regular season with only one defeat, proved a little too good for the Senators and held them to eight hits.

The Cyclops of the Greater Portland-Valley league, lost to the Port of Portland at Portland 4 to 3, making a clean sweep of the opening games for the City league teams.

Montavilla started by making three runs in the first inning, and added another in the third before the Senators could get started. Salem made one run in the fourth, but the visitors put the game away by scoring two more in the fifth.

The Senators managed to reach Harkins more effectively in the later innings, and made two more in the seventh and one in the ninth, but lost a chance to tie the score when Burton, batting for Quinn, fanned with two out and a man on base.

Harkins struck out 10 men in all, and was unhittable in tight places. Turpin for the Senators pitched a good game, but several errors at critical places put him in bad holes.

Hayes of Salem and Engle of the visitors hit home runs. Zimmerman of Montavilla made three hits, including a double, and stole a base. Bishop of Salem and Engle of Montavilla each collected two hits. Summary:
