International Good Wi

TOKIO.-Juviniles of Japan and America are contributing to international good will be exchanging letters. More than fivehundred have been written by children of grammar schools in the countries under the encouragement of the eague of Nations association.

M. Kokawa, in charge of the Boy's section of the Association of Tokyo, believes the movement. growing in popularity, is "bound to contribute materially to mutual understanding and the peace of the world."

American children are particularly fond of Japanese picture post cards and letter paper of pretty design. On either side the youngsters exhibit a friendly curlosity as to the life and persons with whom they correspond:

There is a great deal of difference between holding a mortgage and having it hold you.
