

SALEM PEOPLE SEE OAK GROVE PLANT

They Inspect Place Where They Get Their Lights and Power

About 40 Salem people were invited by the Portland Electric Power company to visit their Oak Grove plant in Clackamas county on Sunday, and inspect one of the principal sources of the power and light that come to Salem over the transmission wires of that company.

The invited guests left Salem at 6:30 and arrived at Estacada about 9, in order to catch the electric car and trailer leaving for Oak Grove at that hour. A gas-line speeder was substituted for the electric car about three miles up the track, and the balance of the trip was made with the speeder and trailer; about 25 miles.

A stop was made a little after 12 at the picnic grounds for lunch, with hot coffee served by an employee of the company. Then the speeder and trailer with the visitors went on up the track to the intake of the pipe line. This is 65 miles from Portland, and about the same distance from Salem, in a direct line.

After inspecting the dam and intake, on the Oak Grove fork of the Clackamas river, the company started on the return trip. They made a stop at the power plant, nearly nine miles below the intake by rail and nearly seven miles by the pipe line that conveys the water to the power plant.

After inspecting the power plant, the party proceeded to Estacada, where supper was served for visitors by the company, at the hotel there. O. B. Coldwell, vice president of the company, was called upon and explained the wonderful project which the visitors had been inspecting, and the plans for further development by his company. Mr. Coldwell was born near Salem; is an Oregon product, and was at home with the visitors.

The visitors arrived home from 9 to 10 o'clock, all feeling that they had spent a wonderful day. The Statesman will, within the next few days, undertake to give readers a detailed description of the Oak Grove project, and what it all means, in the language of a layman.

The following were among the visitors making the trip from Salem:

Dr. R. E. Lap Steiner, Dr. L. F. Griffith, Geo. V. Bernhardt, C. W. Usher, C. O. Rice, C. O. Engstrom, C. A. Vibbert, B. B. Herrick, John B. Giesy, Watson Townsend, U. G. Boyer, H. H. ONION MART QUIET; ONE CAR SHIPPED

Large Yield of California and Washington Keeps the Prices Down

Little movement of onions from Brooks is expected for some time because of the low market price. The first car of the season was sent out Saturday.

Much of the crop in the Labish district will be put into storage for the time being, but a few growers prefer to send their crop out, even at the low price available.

A car of celery was sent from the Labish union Saturday to the Florida markets. Most of the celery cutting will be done after the middle of September, it is believed, as the demand in August was unusually light.

THOUSANDS MOURN AT BIER OF VALENTINO

Hundreds were injured, windows were broken and upper Broadway, New York, traffic demoralized as crowds estimated at 40,000 tried to force their way into the funeral church to view the body of Rudolph Valentino. Photos show the body on the bier, with a lone mourner weeping at its foot; two of the late "sheiks" adoringly expressing their prayerful grief for him on the steps of the hospital as his body was taken away; and a glimpse of the milling crowd about the funeral church. Note the preponderance of men.

PRIESTS CHANT SOLEMN MASS FOR SCREEN STAR

THOUSANDS LINE ROUTE OF FUNERAL CORTEGE

Place of Burial Will be Decided by Brother, Now on Way From Europe

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—(By A. P.)—Rudolph Valentino was bidden a last farewell by the public today.

The scene was Broadway, which had emblazoned his name in electric signs and where only a few years before he had worked as dishwasher, and later as a cabaret dancer at $50 a week. Solid walls of humanity lined the route of the funeral cortege which started at a Broadway funeral parlor at Sixty-sixth street, and ended at the little church of St. Malachy, in Forty-fifth street. Theatrical folk, movie fans, people of the tenement district and the thousands who make up the variegated life of the roaring forties turned out en masse.

Two women who had figured in romances of his life followed his coffin. Pola Negri, who had announced before his death that she was engaged to marry him, followed close upon the hearse. Next came Jean Acker, Valentino's first wife, who announced just after his death that they had been reconciled during his last days.

In the dim nave of the little church within earshot of the clamor of Broadway's noonday, priests chanted over the sealed silver casket the solemn requiem mass that bade the soul of the departed screen star "rest in peace."

The candles, lighting the soul of the dead on its way, flickered into the faces of the hero and heroine of the screen. In the shadowed pews other friends of the screen idol, plain men and women of all ages, knelt to repeat the prayers the priests intoned.

As the priest intoned "peace be with thee," Miss Negri shook with sobs, fell back in her seat, and was supported by S. George Ullman, who was Valentino's manager. Behind her Miss Acker leaned forward until her head rested on her knees and her companions administered stimulants.

After the funeral the body was removed from the church back to the funeral parlors where it will remain until the arrival of Valentino's brother, Alberto Guglielmo, from Europe. He will decide the place of burial.

SECRETARY UNATTENDED

HOOVER WANTS TO VISIT OLD SALEM FRIENDS

PORTLAND, Aug. 28.—(A. P.)—Although Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, left no forwarding address when he left here a week ago for a trip into western Oregon to visit scenes of boyhood in the region of Salem and Newberg, meager reports have been received concerning his movements.

Tourists report having seen him at Diamond lake; that he had been joined by his son, Herbert Jr., a student at Stanford university; that they had passed Wednesday night at Crater Lake lodge, and on Thursday they were seen headed in the general direction of Klamath Falls.

While here Secretary Hoover expressed his desire to roam about Oregon unattended, and unannounced. "Really, my visit here is just a matter of sentiment," he said. "I want to visit Newberg and Salem where I lived as a boy and hunt up some of my old-time friends, fish a little, and rest."

MILK WANTED BY NEW SALEM FIRM

The First Thing Is to Confer With People With Milk to Sell

The Salem Dairy Products company is being incorporated and organized. The company has some new ideas for making milk products. They will not be in competition with any one. They will not step on any one's toes. Their place of business is to be at 1261 State street, but they are not ready yet for the general public. This will come later, and there will be a public invitation. What they want right now is milk. They want to confer with people who have milk to sell; the milk of one cow or several cows. Not pure bred cows, either. Just good, clean cows, giving clean milk, and handled as they want it handled.

So if you can furnish some milk, these people want to see you. They would like to see you today, or tomorrow, or one day this week; the earlier the better. It is the Salem Dairy Products Co., 1261 State street, phone listed the same, phone number 2233. Now, this week, for the milk supply, and then the business will be ready for the general public, perhaps a week from tomorrow.

PRUNE CROP ABOUT SAME AS YEAR AGO

California Fruit News Quotes Prune Prices as Uniform and Steady

No change has occurred in the prune market since it opened, according to the California Fruit News. The crop in California is about the same as last year's in most cases, with a larger one in the Santa Clara valley and a smaller one in some of the other districts along the upper Sacramento river.

Prices on this year's prune crop are practically uniform, with only a small shading existing. The prune association has withdrawn from the market temporarily "sunsweet" 50s and 60s in order to check on its gradings.

Practically all the 1925 crop is sold.

MYSTERY PLAY IS AT OREGON TODAY

Monte Blue in "The Man Upstairs" a Warner Production

"The Man Upstairs," the Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen, starring Monte Blue, is at the Oregon theatre today. This mystery play is based on "The Agony Column," written by Earl Derr Biggers, and is said to be even more riotous fun than "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the famous success of the same author.

Monte Blue plays a young man alone in London who is in search of romance. Dorothy Devore plays the pretty girl with whom he falls in love and whos by sending her a series of thrilling letters to satisfy her craving for adventure. Heinie Conklin plays a colored servant, Helen Dunbar Miss Devore's aunt, and John Roche an army officer who helps give Monte some of the thrills which his imaginary murder provided for Dorothy Devore.

Roy Del Ruth directed "The Man Upstairs," for which E. T. Lowe, Jr., wrote the scenario.

TOO MANY PEACHES SAYS LA FOLLETTE

Alec Raised a Lot of Fruit, But the Reporter Made It Too High

Hon. A. M. LaFollette was in Salem yesterday. He wants it known that the reported high price for peaches from his peach crop got the total a little high. The reporter put it at 30,000 boxes on thirty acres.

Alec, as he is generally called by his friends, says he did not get that many peaches from his thirty acre orchard; but he did get a good crop, 20,000 to 25,000 boxes.

He is not entirely through with his peach crop yet. He has some fine Muir and Wager peaches left—very fine for canning. He says those who want these peaches will have to come after them, to the LaFollette farm on Mission bottom. Every body down that way on route 8 knows where the farm is.
