Ingle Nook Feature of Living Room
Plan Number 512

A delightfully cozy ingle nook is the chief feature of the living room in this charming five-room cottage. The sense of privacy is further enhanced by the entrance hallway and by the absence of the usual open archway to the dining room.

True the dining room is small, but the housewife will find compensations in its diminutive size and the guest will be sure of cheerful hospitality within its cozy confines.

The kitchen is handily designed and equipped to save steps to hurried feet. Its roomy porch will be appreciated by the experienced housekeeper.

Both bedrooms are of ample size and well lighted and ventilated. There is plenty of closet space in the chambers and in the small central hallway. Extra storage space may be arranged at small cost in the attic.

This house, with exterior finish in stucco, may be built at moderate cost. On a 50 by 100 foot site plenty of space will be left for lawn and garden.

Growth of Local Groups Fastest in City History

Thirty-five years ago the Salem Y was born. Like any other red-faced, feebly-kicking, squalling little brat, but of good parentage, but starting in on practically nothing but its heredity and the loving care of its parents.

The child that doesn't grow, is a dwarf, a misconception; if it lacks either soul or body, it will be a total loss.

But the Salem Y had both; and it had heritage, and love, and nurture. It simply had to grow.

Well, it did. From the first $1200 budget and one room and one scared worker, to a $200,000 plant and a whole raft of night-and-day busy employes.

This is its thirty-fifth anniversary. At thirty-five, almost anything that man makes or knows can be judged by what it has already done. The Y ought to stand on its record.

Financially, it has grown 15,000 per cent.

Physically it has grown from a bare office to a splendid body-and-soul-building plant, a factory where raw human material is built into units that are to influence the whole world for the better.

Socially, it started with The Big Idea; that was founded on the Rock of Ages, and it couldn't well change. But the facilities for service, for reaching so many more men in so many more ways, have increased enormously, and the enthusiasm in the last extension is as great as that in the first.

Spiritually and socially it has kept the faith. What more, indeed, could any human agency do, than to keep the faith and never turn back to any task of regeneration, of service, of social or spiritual betterment?

The thirty-fifth anniversary ought to bring joy; for the Y has justified the faith and the hopes of every idealist who has ever had a hand in its growth. It has grown no corns, no crooked limbs, no cancers, no diseased lungs or tainted breath; it's clean and white clear through.

A birthday that brought only increasing weakness, increasing years without increasing knowledge, the fear that its mission was misunderstood or the sneaking consciousness that the whole life had been a fraud and a hypocrisy, would be a sorry enough anniversary. It might be celebrated in the asylum, in the gutter, but not in the light of day.

The Salem Y is glad to call attention to its years, and ask the public to note that they have been industriously, wisely spent. For many years, the Salem Y did a work that was nationwide in its reputation for excellence with a starveling equipment. Now, the association has as good an equipment as any; an adequate staff; the loyal support of the community that is gladly giving to thousands where once it gave to tens of hundreds with fear and trembling and distrust. It is a challenge to the Y to do better than ever before.

There is a beautiful story of a prince who headed his army against the army. The battle tide went against them. One stout warrior, with the point of his sword broken in his first encounter, threw away the weapon and took to his heels. The Prince, fighting desperately, sword broken to the hilt, was forced backward, unarmed. He stumbled over the recreant knight's blade, with its point broken.

"Ha! A good sword!" he cried, flinging away the worthless pommel and seizing the new arm. "Now I am armed. Men, to me! I, the son of the king, am armed and again able to fight! Forward!" And they won the day.

The Salem Y, with its limited equipment, has fought the big fight. Now it is armed; and in the spirit of the Prince, the son of the King, it is going on. How far and how fast, depends partly on the warriors with it. But the spirit is right, and the Y is going into its 35th year as sure of a sweeping victory as it is sure that it has won its fights in the past.

The Y is no any other man or woman; it is you. It is the tangible spirit of humanity that gives for the joy of giving, that serves for the joy of service, and that incidentally always gets usurious profits on its gifts.

You want the Y to grow faster and to do more and do it quicker? Fine—pitch in and pull. Throw away the breeching and dig into the collar, and the Y growth for the past 35 years will look like a funeral beside a 100-horsepower auto for speed.

HOLLYWOOD SHOW GROWS RAPIDLY

New Theater on North Capitol Street Will Hold 550 Persons, Claim

With construction having continued three weeks, John Williamson's new Hollywood theater at North Capitol street and Fairgrounds road is beginning to assume form. The building faces Capitol street, and is 50 by 100 feet in size, with a main floor, sub-floor and upper floor.

The main floor will be taken up by the theater auditorium and stage, the theater lobby, a small store space, and an office for Mr. Williamson. The sub-floor above it will have rest rooms, operator's room, and a manager's office.

The upper floor will be occupied by nine up to date apartments.

The theater auditorium will hold 550 persons, and will have excellent accommodations, decorations, and the like, according to Mr. Williamson. What kind of pictures will be shown has not been decided, but first run shows may be put on.

All footings for the building have been poured, as has the sub-floor for the stage. The basement beneath the stage is also complete. Forms for the four walls are in place, together with the reinforcing concrete.

With good weather continuing, the building will be roofed over in about 30 days, Mr. Williamson believes.

There will be excellent heating and ventilating systems installed in the new theater, the builders state. Special attention will be given to obtaining first class seating arrangements and music for the theater. An organ of the latest type will be obtained for musical accompaniments to the pictures.

Bishop, John H. Albert, Ben S. Cook, C. Marsh, T. Halversen, J. A. Van Eaton, Ed Cross, Frank Gilbert, and H. S. Gile, the club member.

About the time the association moved into the J. C. Brown building the first general secretary, Mr.

J. R. Wetherbee was employed. He came to us from the employ of the Seattle Hardware company and had had considerable YMCA training in the Seattle association. Joe, as everybody called him, later became physical director for the University of Oregon, and while there studied medicine, married a wife, and later became one of the very prominent doctors in Portland where he is still practicing.

The second president of the association was Mr. Fred A. Wiggins, now president of the Washington Nursery company of Toppenish. In a recent letter Mr. Wiggins gives expression to the following sentiment:

"The work of the Young Men's Christian association is reflected in the lives and activities of many men who are occupying positions of more or less responsibility throughout the entire west. Many of them would doubtless be unable to say just what influenced them most or just where that guiding and inspiring force came from which shaped their lives into worth while endeavor. Personally I will always recall the inspiration I received from the splendid advice and counsel of such women as Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Ladue and Mrs. Bishop and others who were connected with the ladies' auxiliary of the YMCA whom I met during my first few months in Salem when I was a young man of 20, away from home and trying to find myself.

"In closing may I suggest the names of one or two of the men who no doubt received the vision of their life work directly through the influence of this association. Outstanding among many I think at this moment of John Fechter who later proved his ability as a general secretary, and the late Albert Griley, whom I know was to love, and no one can name those of local church activity here and the many who have gone to other places from Salem who doubtless look back and thank Salem Young Men's Christian association for pointing them into the right way."

CODE-BUILT HOMES STAND HURRICANE

Hoover Code Meets and Stands Test in Recent Florida Tempest

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—(Special)—The advance in home building as exemplified in the Hoover Building code has met and withstood a severe test in the recent Florida hurricane.

Coral Gables, one of the most widely known cities in the path of the storm, was practically undamaged. It was built of masonry construction according to standards set up by the Hoover code. Recent reports by investigators who have viewed the effects of the 12-mile wind say that the lack of damage was due only to the great strength of material and mortar used in the wall construction. When the city was planned, a Mediterranean style of architecture was chosen and the effect was carried out in concrete masonry walls which were coated with textured and tinted stucco. Gaily colored tile roofs were used. Those in charge of construction kept close supervision of the work to make sure that the standards laid down in the building code prepared by the U. S. department of commerce were complied with.

In the opinion of those who have made the survey of the situation, the freedom from damage and loss of life as compared with other cities in the path of the storm and where flimsy construction was the rule, brings out the sound judgment of using materials of sufficient strength to preserve the integrity of the building itself under most unfavorable conditions.

Statues of Ex-Kaisers Ancestors Get Cleaning

BERLIN, (AP)—To give the ex-kaiser's progenitors the "once over" the famous "Siegesallee" in the Tiergarten has been equipped with a series of scaffoldings giving the drive the appearance of a building plot.

For the two long files of marble statues which the late emperor had erected to immortalize his genealogical tree, from the first Elector of Brandenburg down to Emperor William I, have become sorely in need of repair. Here a nose of some historical ruler, there a finger, an ear or a broken sword are to be patched up. But most of all does the illustrious company require a thorough washing and scrubbing.

LADD & BUSH BANK WORK CONTINUING

Modern and Strong Vaults Being Built Under Old Building and New

Work on the new Ladd & Bush bank annex so far has been limited to building the new vaults under the site of the old Anderson sporting goods store and also under the present bank building.

Lords and loads of concrete and reinforcing material have gone into the building of these vaults, expected to be among the best, strongest and most modern vaults in the northwest, with the most efficient equipment obtainable.

Much excavating has been done under the old building, enlarging the basement and extending it under the sidewalk on Commercial street. The contractors will soon begin tearing out walls in the banking rooms and preparing the new bookkeeping room in the rear of Anderson's former quarters.
