Full Quota of Delegates Expected to Attend State Teachers' Congress

On her recent trip through eastern Oregon Mrs. W. W. Gabriel of Portland, president of the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teacher, was pleased to note the enthusiasm shown for the 21st annual convention which will be held in Salem the last of the month. Associations were all completing plans for sending their delegates and a full quota is expected. Mrs. Gabriel visited parent-teacher associations and county councils in Umatilla, Baker, Union, Willama and Malheur counties, and found them very active and accomplishing big things. An indication of their activity is the fact that members of the county councils travel 40 miles and over to attend their meetings. Mrs. Gabriel reports that the four associations in La Grande have undertaken to bring Judge Beh "Lindsay to their city for a lecture." He is judge of the juvenile court of Denver and an authority on child welfare work in its relation to the courts. The Pendleton associations, and the Umatilla county council which met at Pendleton at the same time arranged many pleasant social affairs for Mrs. Gabriel during her visit there. In addition to the preparations found for the convention in eastern Oregon, officers in southern Oregon report that large delegations will come to Salem from that part of the state.

Four New Players Added to Moroni Olsen Company

Moroni Olsen, of the Moroni Olsen Players, announces with pleasure the addition to his cast of four new players for the coming season.

Harry R. Allen, from Salt Lake City is the newest "find" of the company. In addition to his versatility as an actor, he is contributing much toward the Moroni Olsen Players' productions this year by his beautiful and unusual stage sets.

Donna Jones and Mary Croke are both new for "Dear Brutus." Donna Jones has toured with a company through Australia and New Zealand, and Mary Croke has acted in Chicago and San Francisco.

Harry Nelson, who makes his first appearance with the company in "Outward Bound," has acted successfully in both London and New York city.

And, of course, most of the "old faces" will be there: Janet Young, Leora Thatcher, Dorothy Adams, Joseph Williams, Gordon Nelson and Byron Foulger.

The title, "Dear Brutus," like many of Barrie's titles, is more provocative than enlightening. The biography-fiction addict might well be pardoned the inference that this drama does for the noblest Roman of them all what Maupoi's "Ariel" does for Shelley and Barington's "The Glorious Apollo" for Byron, admits him to moments more gentle and intimate than the exhortation to carve Caesar as a dish fit for the gods. The title, "Dear Brutus," is but the coupon clipped from the Shakespearean lines that sum up the theme of this drama; a passage known to every high school reader of "Julius Caesar."

"The fault, dear Brutus, is not our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings."

This drama plays with the age-old puzzle of philosophers, fate and free will. Is man the master of his soul? Or is he the victim of the Daughters of Time, the hypocritical Deity, who with assumed indifference offer him choice of gifts great and trivial, yet who upon his hasty, unwise selection flash from under their solemn fillets scorn?

Or again, is the solution a paradox: "The Norms must order all, yet not without thy helping shall one whit of their will befall?"

Man is his own fate. Barrie seems to say, approaching his answer by the method of the second chance. "What men and women are, what they might have been, what little difference in most lives a second chance would make—but how much they might learn from it—this constitutes the story of the play."

But the playgoer who shrinks from the depressing on the stage because he sees so much of it in life need not entrench himself beside his own hearth behind a cheerful best-seller on the night when the Moroni Olsen Players bring "Dear Brutus" to town. The play is not a tragedy, but a fantasy. The philosopher's question is not submitted to the relentless sunlight of a realistic world, but is softened by the dim, mystic light of the realm of faery—not the fairy land of the children's fairy tales, but the domain of the poet's imagination, where things "the light that never was on land or sea, the consecration and the poet's dream." The faery casements open upon a magic wood, through which the dramatist sees with Celtic second sight the realm of Might-Have-Been. For Barrie, though a resident of England for many years, has never renounced his Scottish birthright, his hereditary holdings in the land of the poet's fancy. It should be a satisfaction to any audience to know that they will be given the freedom of this domain by two of the Moroni Olsen Players with a similar inheritance. Dorothy Adams, who traces her claim through a Scottish grandmother, and Janet Young, whose mother was born in Scotland, a member of the Cameron clan. Audiences who have known this company for even one season have confidence that titles to estates in the realm of "fantasy," as in all other lands where dramatists set up their claims, are safe in the hands of the actor-producer, Moroni Olsen.

"Dear Brutus" will be shown at the Elsinore theater next Thursday, Oct. 21.

A PIONEER WOMAN PASSES TO REWARD

Late Husband Last Survivor of Body That Framed State Constitution

Mrs. Wm. H. Packwood died in Salem, Oregon, on Thursday, October 14, 1926, aged 84 years. She was born Joanna O'Brien in Ireland, June 14, 1842. When a small child she started to America with her father and mother, who both died at sea. She went to St. Louis, Mo., and was educated in a convent. She taught school in Omaha, Nebraska, and came with her sister and brother-in-law across the plains to Auburn, Oregon. Her sister's husband was Daniel McLaughlin, an attorney, who was afterwards a noted lawyer in Deadwood, South Dakota.

At that time Auburn was one of the largest cities in Oregon. It was a mining town, 11 miles from Baker, and had 5000 people.

Joanna O'Brien taught school at Auburn. On October 14, 1882, a few months after her arrival, she was married to Wm. H. Packwood. He was the first school superintendent for Baker county, at the same time that S. A. Clarke, father of Mrs. Sallie Dyer of Salem, served as the first county clerk of that county.

Last of Noted List

Mr. Packwood had settled in Curry county before being drawn to Auburn by the mining activity, and he was a member of the constitutional convention that framed the Oregon constitution; held in Salem from August 17 to September 18, 1857. Mr. Packwood was the delegate from Curry county. After moving from Auburn, Mr. Packwood owned and operated the famous Olds ferry across Snake river for several years. Selling the ferry business, he carried on mining operations at Eldorado City and Clark's creek, and built the famous Eldorado ditch from Burnt river to Eldorado (now Malheur City).

Then the Packwoods moved to Baker, where Mr. Packwood was engaged in mining and surveying till the time of his death in 1917. He also held the office of police judge at Baker. He was the last surviving member of the convention that framed the Oregon constitution.

Mrs. Packwood, after the death of her husband, made her home with Mr. and Mrs. John L. Rand, and came to Salem with them when Mr. Rand was elevated to the supreme bench of Oregon as associate justice. Mrs. Rand is the only surviving child of the deceased, out of five children. She gave her mother wonderful devotion during her declining years.

Irrving Rand and wife of Portland came to Salem on the news of Mrs. Packwood's death, and Fred Packwood, they are grandsons of the deceased, and attorneys in the metropolis. With Mrs. Rand, they proceeded yesterday afternoon to Baker with the body, where the funeral will be held and interment take place Monday forenoon. Mrs. Packwood was a

NICHOLS GETS LOT OF BLUE RIBBONS

Cass A. Nichols, Salem route 6, returned yesterday with his exhibition herd of Chester White hogs after making a winning trip to the California show circuit and going on to the big show at Salt Lake City, Utah. He exhibited at the California state fair, Sacramento, also at Ventura, Stockton, Riverside and Pomona, making big winnings at all of these shows, and from there went to Salt Lake City where one of his hogs was awarded the grand champion over all breeds. This hog was purchased by a leading show man of the east and will be taken to the big fall shows of the middle west.

Among the most coveted prizes that Mr. Nichols' hogs won was the prize offered at Pomona, at the close of the California circuit, for the best "killer." That is the hog that dressed out the heaviest percentage and made the nicest carcass. Mr. Nichols will remain at home for a few days and will then take his exhibit to Portland to be exhibited at the Pacific International.

Eugene, New postoffice address here, will cost $20,000.

PROPERTY SALES POOR IN EUROPE

Americans Hindered in Real Estate Business by Many Languages

The real estate business in Europe is a negligible quantity, C. E. Robertson, who has been in that continent for 12 years, told members of the Marion-Polk county realty board at their noonday luncheon in the Marion hotel on Thursday.

"You are lucky to be doing business in the United States," he said, "because in Europe you would probably be out of a job."

In England, especially, the land is tied up in big estates so that there is very little turnover. Only about 2,000,000 out of the 45,000,000 people in England own any land in fee simple.

In France and Germany the situation is not quite so bad, but the property there is also entailed to a large extent, so that the real estate broker is practically unknown.

It is easier to sell property in Italy, but the price of land there is so high that little dealings in real estate is done.

Americans are greatly handicapped in doing business in Europe because they do not understand the history of the country
