Bits For Breakfast We must keep busy— If we are to have a sugar factory for the 1927 crop— We must get out after the contracts for 8,000 acres of beets, and stay on the job diligently till it is finished.

Mrs. Justice Rand's mother, who died in Salem Thursday, lived in 1862 in the second largest city in Oregon; the largest excepting Portland. You do not even hear of its name now. It was Auburn, 11 miles from Baker, with 5,000 people. It was a mining town that grew up almost overnight, flourished wonderfully for a time, and then vanished. Had you heard of Auburn?

Salem lady complains to the Bits man that some of the most valued historical relics in Oregon are constantly being carried away from Salem to Portland and elsewhere; things that can never be replaced. She wants something done about it. She wants the Methodists to put that contemplated great memorial building on the Willamette university campus; and the Methodists have her sanction to make every member of every other church and of no church at all help in paying the cost.

AURORA BOREALIS PLAYS HAVOC WITH TELEGRAPH NEWS SERVICES SERIOUSLY AFFECTED BY STORM East and West Communications Hit Worst by Magnetic Earth Currents

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP)—A magnetic storm of unusual intensity swept over the northeastern United States and Canada today.

Going on one of its worst rampages in many months, Aurora Borealis, maker of celestial fireworks that frequently light up the Arctic night, caused earth currents that stopped the operation of telegraph and cable wires entirely for a period this afternoon and throughout the day crippled both land and cable services.

For a while this afternoon nearly every wire in the New York offices of The Associated Press was "dead." In Canada, the Canadian Press and Telegraph companies likewise found their wires seriously affected by the disturbances.

Efforts were made by telegraph experts to work adjustments to meet the frequent changes in earth currents, but Aurora Borealis worked too fast for human hands.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 15.—Magnetic earth currents which crippled wire service in the east today also caused trouble in the west.

The Rocky mountain region was most affected, news and commercial wires in Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, New Mexico and Arizona being put out of commission at intervals.

On the Kansas City-San Francisco trunk lines of The Associated Press intermittent interruptions occurred during the morning, the peak of the disturbance coming between noon and 2 p. m., central time.

As usual during magnetic storms, wires stretching east and west were hardest-hit. No appreciable trouble was experienced up and down the Pacific coast. At San Francisco the phenomenon was barely perceptible. Telegraph and telephone company officials here reported serious delays on all circuits to the Atlantic coast.

No difficulty was experienced to the south in Oklahoma and Texas, however.
